FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 5, 1887.

The first Monday of December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the first session of the Fiftieth Congress commenced this day.

The Senators assembled in the Senate Chamber in the Capitol at Washington city.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. JOHN J. INGALLS, a Senator from the State of Kansas) took the chair and called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock noon.

PRAYER.

Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., Chaplain to the Senate, offered the following prayer:

Breathe into us, Oh Lord, our God, the spirit of prayer as we bow reverently at the throne of heavenly grace. We adore Thee, our maker, our preserver, our redeemer, and bless Thee for the kind providence that in life and health brings us again together in these responsible relations.

Oh Lord, our God, our eyes are toward Thee as we lift our hearts for guidance, for grace, for strength, that these, Thy servants, may meet the honorable and trying responsibilities of this day and all the duties that gather around them in Thy fear, in Thy love, with wisdom and strength that come down from God. In their persons, in their families, very abundantly bless them. So fill them with Thy spirit that amid the trying and worrying cares of life they may gain control over their own hearts and think and speak and act in the immediate presence of God.

Bless, we pray Thee, our Government in all its departments. Remember the President in great mercy, and the members of his Cabinet. Pour Thy spirit richly upon all who bear rule in this land and upon all who are under authority.

Thy grace, Oh God of our fathers, follows us from year to year. We pray Thee save us from all the evils that threaten us, and help us so to walk in Thy commandments and ordinances, in the fear and love of God, that this land, so abundantly blessed of Heaven, may lead the nations of the world in their onward march toward that kingdom which shall never be moved.

We commend to Thee the interests of all the people, and entreat Thee, Oh God, to deliver us from violence and lawlessness, from ignorance and intemperance, and from everything that imperils the life, and the peace, and the well-being of the nation. Bless us among the nations of the world.

We entreat Thee, Oh God, that Thy kingdom may be established, and that the spirit of truth, of justice, of love, of mercy may control the hearts of all rulers and all people, and that very soon the time shall come when the kingdoms of this world shall be as one family, acknowledging God and Him whose right it is to reign.

We ask these mercies, with forgiveness and grace, in the name of Him who hath taught us, when we pray, to say: Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The certificate of the election of Charles J. Faulkner as a Senator from the State of West Virginia will now be read.

The credentials of Charles James Faulkner, chosen by the Legislature of West Virginia a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1887, were read, as follows:

State of West Virginia, to wit:

I, E. W. Wilson, governor of the State of West Virginia, do hereby certify that section 18, article 6, of the constitution of said State, provides as follows:

"SEC. 18. The Legislature shall assemble at the seat of government biennially, and not oftener, unless convened by the governor. The first session of the Legislature after the adoption of the constitution shall commence on the third Tuesday of November, 1872; and the regular biennial session of the Legislature shall commence on the second Wednesday of January, 1875, and every two years thereafter, on the same day."

That in pursuance of said constitutional provision, the Legislature of said State convened at Charleston, the seat of government thereof, in regular biennial session, on the second Wednesday in January, 1887, and adjourned sine die on the 25th day of February, said year, without having chosen a Senator from said State in the Senate of the United States, for the term beginning on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1887, without having chosen a Senator from said State in the Senate of the United States, for the term beginning on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1887, and a vacancy having thus happened: Now, therefore,

"I, E. W. Wilson, governor of the State of West Virginia, do, by virtue of said Constitution, appoint Daniel B. Lucas, of the county of Jefferson, a Senator from this State in the Senate of the United States, until the next meeting of the Legislature of said State having authority to fill said vacancy.

"Given under my hand and the great seal of the State, this the 5th day of March, A. D. 1887.

"[G. S.] E. W. WILSON.

[SEAL.] E. W. WILSON.

By the governor:
HENRY S. WALKER,
Secretary of State.

That in pursuance of said proclamation, the Legislature of said State assembled in the capitol building at Charleston aforesaid, on the third Wednesday in April, A. D. 1887, and that, amongst other things, on the 3d day of May, 1887, the following proceedings were taken in the senate, as appears by the journal thereof, to wit:

Mr. Sommerville moved that the senate proceed openly, by a viva voce vote of each member present, to name a person for Senator in the Congress of the United States, from this State, to fill the vacancy which exists in the representation of this State in the Senate of the United States, caused by the expiration of the term of Johnson N. Camden and the failure of the Legislature to elect his successor.

Mr. Morris raised the point of order that it was not then in order to take such a vote.

The president decided the point of order not well taken.

On agreeing to the motion made by Mr. Sommerville, Mr. Scott demanded the ayes and noes, and the demand being sustained, they were ordered, and taken as follows:

The ayes were: Messrs. Price (president), Arnold, Bond, Brown, Carr, Gettinger, Gwinn, Maxwell, Minear, Morris, Morrison, McCreery, McCallister, Oxley, Price (of Marshall), Sommerville, Sweeney, Switzer, Unger, and Van Pelt—20.

The noes were: Messrs. Dawson, Flournoy, Furbee, and Scott.

Messrs. Snyder and Woodyard not voting. So the motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the president announced that the senate would proceed openly, by a viva voce vote of each member present, to name a person for Senator in the Congress of the United States from this State, to fill the vacancy which exists in the representation of this State in the Senate of the United States, caused by the expiration of the term of Johnson N. Camden, and the failure of the Legislature to elect his successor, to which vacancy the governor temporarily appointed Daniel B. Lucas in the recess of the Legislature, prior to the commencement of the present session thereof.

Whereupon the senate, in pursuance of the provisions of the act of Congress of the United States entitled "An act to regulate the times and manner of holding elections for Senators in Congress," approved July 25, 1866, proceeded to take such vote.

Upon a call of the roll by the clerk, Messrs. Brown, Gettinger, Gwinn, McCreery, McCallister, Oxley, Sommerville, Sweeney, Unger, and Van Pelt voted for Johnson N. Camden. Messrs. Arnold, Bond, Dawson, Furbee, Maxwell, Minear, Morris, Morrison, and Scott voted for W. H. H. Flick. Mr. Carr voted for A. R. Barbee. Mr. Flournoy voted for John J. Davis. Mr. Price (of Marshall) voted for A. F. Haymond. Mr. Price (president) voted for John Brannon. Messrs. Snyder, Switzer, and Woodyard not voting. Whole number of votes cast, 23, of which Mr. Camden received 10, Mr. Flick received 9, Mr. Barbee received 1, Mr. Davis received 1, Mr. Haymond received 1, Mr. Brannon received 1; no person having received the votes of a majority of all the members of the senate present.

The senate then resumed its regular order of business; and on the same day the following proceedings were taken in the house of delegates, as appears by the journal thereof, to wit:

The hour of 12 o'clock meridian having arrived, Mr. Woods moved that the house now proceed to vote, viva voce, for a United States Senator, as required by the Constitution of the United States, and in pursuance of the act of Congress approved July 25, 1866; which motion was agreed to.

Whereupon the house, in pursuance of the act of Congress of the United States entitled "An act to regulate the times and manner of holding elections for Senators in Congress," approved July 25, 1866, proceeded openly, by a viva voce vote of each member present, to name one person for Senator in Congress from this State, to fill the vacancy which exists in the representation of this State in the Senate of the United States caused by the expiration of the term of Johnson N. Camden, and the failure of the Legislature to select his successor, to which vacancy the governor temporarily appointed Daniel B. Lucas in the recess of the Legislature prior to the commencement of the present session thereof.

For that position Mr. Toler nominated A. R. Barbee, of the county of Mason; Mr. Chipley nominated A. F. Haymond, of the county of Marion; Mr. McClung nominated John W. Harris, of the county of Greenbrier; Mr. Hagans nominated W. H. H. Flick, of the county of Berkeley; Mr. Ragland nominated Johnson N. Camden, of the county of Wood; Mr. Beckwith nominated D. B. Lucas, of the county of Jefferson.

There being no other nominations, the Speaker directed that the roll be called.

On the roll being called, Messrs. Rowan (speaker), Brown, Byrne, Chancellor, Cochran, Jacob, Cochran, P. B., Crockett, Crow, Davisson, Ferguson, Garden, Gleason, Gorrell, Hager, Hamilton, Harding, Hiner, Keliar, Kidd, Peck, Ragland, Reynolds, Riffe, Roseberry, Shaw, Spencer, Whittaker, Woods, and Yeager voted for Johnson N. Camden. Messrs. Bowers, Cook, Depue, Duval, Gandee, Hagans, Haymond, Hensley, Hoke, Holmes, Jones, Kincaid, Largent, McCombs, McKinney, McWhorter, Middleton, Ropp, Sinclair, Smith, Thayer, Woodyard, and Young voted for W. H. H. Flick. Messrs. Gates, Oakes, Sturm, Taylor, and Toler voted for A. R. Barbee. Messrs. McClung and Sydenstricker voted for John W. Harris. Messrs. Chambers, Chipley, and Kinsey voted for A. F. Haymond. Messrs. Beckwith and Chew voted for D. B. Lucas. Mr. Pugh voted for John Brannon. All the members elected to the house being present and voting. Whole number of votes cast, 65; of which Mr. Camden received 29, Mr. Flick received 23, Mr. Barbee received 5, Mr. Haymond received 3, Mr. Harris received 2, Mr. Lucas received 2, Mr. Brannon received 1; from which vote it appears that no one person received the votes of a majority of all the members elected to the house.

That on the 4th day of May, 1887, the following proceedings were taken by the two houses in joint assembly, as appears by the journal of the house, to wit:

This being the day fixed by an act of Congress passed July 25, 1866, entitled "An act to regulate the times and manner of holding elections for Senators in Congress," for the two houses of the Legislature to convene in joint assembly, at 12 o'clock meridian the presence within the hall of the house of the senate in a body, preceded by their sergeant-at-arms, president, and clerk, was announced by the sergeant-at-arms of the house. Whereupon the president of the senate addressed the speaker of the house as follows:

"Mr. Speaker, the senate has assembled in the hall of the house of delegates for the purpose of carrying into effect the act of Congress providing for the election of United States Senators."

The speaker of the house then invited the president of the senate to take the chair and act as presiding officer of the joint assembly. Thereupon the president of the senate took the chair as presiding officer and called the joint assembly to order. The presiding officer then directed the clerk of the senate to call the roll of the senate and the clerk of the house of delegates to call the roll of the house. The rolls of the senate and house were called by their respective clerks, and the presence in joint assembly of all the members elected to the house and a majority of all the members elected to the senate was announced by the presiding officer. On motion of Mr. Hamilton the rules of the senate, so far as applicable, were adopted for the government of the joint assembly. The journals of the two houses of the Legislature of yesterday were then read by their respective clerks. Whereupon the presiding officer announced the following as the result of the vote on yesterday in each house for United States Senator:

In the senate, Johnson N. Camden received 10 votes; W. H. H. Flick received 9 votes; A. R. Barbee received 1 vote; John Brannon received 1 vote; J. J. Davis received 1 vote; A. F. Haymond received 1 vote. Whole number of votes cast, 23; number of senators not voting, 3.

In the house of delegates, Johnson N. Camden received 29 votes; W. H. H. Flick received 23 votes; A. R. Barbee received 5 votes; A. F. Haymond received 3 votes; John W. Harris received 2 votes; D. B. Lucas received 2 votes; John Brannon received 1 vote. Whole number of votes cast, 65; all the members elected to the house having voted.

Thereupon, the presiding officer announced that as no one person voted for had received a majority of all the votes cast by each house of the Legislature, voting separately in their respective houses, there was no election.

The presiding officer then announced that the joint assembly would proceed to choose, by a viva voce vote of each member present, a person for Senator in Congress from this State, to fill the vacancy which exists in the representation of this State in the Senate of the United States, caused by the expiration of the term of Johnson N. Camden, and the failure of the Legislature to select his successor, to which vacancy the governor temporarily appointed Daniel B. Lucas, in the recess of the Legislature, prior to the commencement of the present session thereof.

Whereupon the presiding officer announced that as no person voted for had received a majority of all the votes cast by both branches of the Legislature, voting in joint assembly, there was no election. Mr. Hamilton, a delegate, moved that the joint assembly do now dissolve. On that motion Mr. Hiner demanded the ayes and noes, which demand was not sustained. The motion to dissolve was then put and decided in the affirmative. Whereupon the presiding officer declared the joint assembly dissolved. The senate then retired to their chamber and the speaker resumed the chair.

That on the 5th day of May, 1887, the following proceedings were taken by the two houses in joint assembly, as appears by a certified transcript of the journal of the house, by the clerk and keeper of the rolls thereof, to wit:

The presence of the senate within the hall of the house of delegates, preceded by their sergeant-at-arms, president, and clerk, at the hour of 12 o'clock meridian, the hour required by the act of Congress, passed July 25, 1866, for the members of the two houses of the Legislature to convene in joint assembly for the purpose of electing a Senator in Congress, was announced by the sergeant-at-arms of the house of delegates. Whereupon the president of the senate addressed the speaker of the house of delegates as follows:

"Mr. Speaker, the senate has assembled in the hall of the house of delegates for the purpose of carrying into effect the act of Congress providing for the election of United States Senators."

The speaker of the house then invited the president of the senate to take the chair and act as presiding officer of the joint assembly. Thereupon the president of the senate took the chair as presiding officer, and called the joint assembly to order. The presiding officer then directed the clerk of the senate to call the roll of the senate and the clerk of the house of delegates to call the roll of the house. The rolls of the senate and house were called by their respective clerks, and the presence in joint assembly of all the members elected to the house and a majority of all the members elected to the senate was announced by the presiding officer.

On motion of Mr. Ragland, a delegate, the rules adopted for the government of the joint assembly were suspended, and the reading of that part of the journals of the senate and house of delegates of yesterday touching the proceedings of the joint assembly was dispensed with.

The said two journals were then approved.

The presiding officer then announced that the joint assembly would proceed to choose, by a viva voce vote of each member present, a person for Senator in Congress from this State, to fill the vacancy which exists in the representation of this State in the Senate of the United States, caused by the expiration of the term of Johnson N. Camden and the failure of the Legislature to elect his successor, to which vacancy the governor temporarily appointed Daniel B. Lucas in the recess of the Legislature prior to the commencement of the present session thereof.

Mr. Gorrell, a delegate, nominated Jacob B. Jackson, of the county of Wood. Mr. Rowan (speaker), nominated Frank Hereford, of the county of Monroe. Mr. Price (of Marshall), a member of the senate, nominated R. S. Brown, of the county of Jackson. Mr. McCreery, a member of the senate, nominated John J. Jackson, of the county of Wood. Ice, of the county of Barbour. Mr. Sweeney, a member of the senate, nominated J. M. Jackson, of the county of Wood.

Upon a call of the roll of the senate by its clerk, Messrs. Arnold, Bond, Dawson, Furbee, Maxwell, Minear, Morris, Morrison, and Woodyard voted for W. H. H. Flick. Mr. Carr voted for A. R. Barbee. Mr. Scott voted for N. E. Whittaker; Mr. Snyder not voting. Number of senators present and voting 25. Charles J. Faulkner received 14 votes; W. H. H. Flick received 9 votes; A. R. Barbee received 1 vote; N. E. Whittaker received 1 vote.

Upon a call of the roll of the house of delegates by their clerk, Messrs. Rowan (speaker), Beckwith, Brown, Byrne, Chambers, Chancellor, Chew, Chipley, Cochrane, Jacob, Cochrane, P. B., Crockett, Crow, Davisson, Ferguson, Garden, Gorrell, Hager, Hamilton, Harding, Hiner, Keller, Kidd, Kinsey, McClung, Peck, Pugh, Ragland, Reynolds, Rifle, Roseberry, Shaw, Spencer, Sydenstricker, and Yeager voted for Charles J. The said Charles J. Faulkner having received a majority of all the votes of the joint assembly, a majority of all the members elected to both houses being present and voting; whereupon the presiding officer announced that Charles J. Faulkner, having received a majority of all the votes cast by both branches of the Legislature voting in joint assembly, is duly elected Senator in Congress from this State, to fill the vacancy which exists in the representation of this State in the Senate of the United States caused by the expiration of the term of Johnson N. Faulkner received a majority of all the votes cast, a majority of all the members elected to each house being present and voting.

Done at the city of Charleston, the capital of the State, this the 25th day of May, A. D. 1887.

Clerk of the House of Delegates and Keeper of the Rolls.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State this the 2d day of June, A. D. 1887.

E. W. WILSON.

By the governor:
HENRY S. WALKER,
Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the protest of Hon. Daniel B. Lucas against the administration of the oath of office to Charles James Faulkner, claiming to have been elected a Senator from the State of West Virginia, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the protest, but before concluding was interrupted by—

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I would suggest that as that remonstrance is in the nature of a petition, the statement of its purport, which has been made from the Chair, is all that is required; and it will be unnecessary to detain the Senate by reading it in full. I suggest, however, as it has been partly read, that the whole of it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that course will be taken, and the protest will be laid on the table and be printed in full in the RECORD.

The paper is as follows:

WASHINGTON, December 5, 1887.

A PROTEST.

To the Senate and Senators of the United States:

As the duly appointed Senator of the State of West Virginia, appointed to fill a vacancy which happened by the expiration of the term of Johnson N. Camden on the 4th of March, 1887, during the recess of the Legislature, and also as a citizen and voter of said State, I respectfully protest against the swearing in and seating of Charles James Faulkner as a Senator of said State, upon the following grounds:

I. The executive of said State has not certified the election of said Charles James Faulkner, under the seal of the State, to the President of the Senate of the United States, as required by section 18 of the act of Congress approved July 25, 1866.

II. For reasons set out in the brief of Daniel B. Lucas, a copy of which accompanies this protest.

III. Because the said Charles James Faulkner was at the time and date of his alleged election, to wit, on the 5th of May, 1887, a judge of the thirteenth judicial circuit of the State of West Virginia, and therefore ineligible to the office of Senator, as will fully appear by an examination of the constitution of said State, and particularly of Article VIII, section 16, thereof, as follows:

"16. All judges shall be commissioned by the governor. The salary of a judge of the supreme court of appeals shall be $2,200 per annum, and that of a judge of the circuit court shall be $1,800 per annum; and each shall receive the same mileage as members of the Legislature: Provided, That Ohio County may pay an additional sum per annum to the judges of the circuit court thereof; but such allowance shall not be increased or diminished during the term of office of the judges to whom it may have been made. No judge during his term of office shall practice the profession of law or hold any other office, appointment, or public trust under this or any other government, and the acceptance thereof shall vacate his judicial office. Nor shall he, during his continuance therein, be eligible to any political office."

In connection herewith the protestant begs leave to file the following documents: A. Brief of Daniel B. Lucas. B. Copy of the resignation of said Charles James Faulkner as judge of the thirteenth judicial circuit of West Virginia, and the reception and acceptance of the same by the governor on the 6th day of May, 1887, certified under the great seal of said State.

The protestant begs leave to call attention to the fact that the decision in this case will establish a precedent, in confirmation of which statement he begs leave to append the synopsis of the only contest bearing any analogy, as follows:

Thirty-fourth Congress, first session. Lyman Trumbull, Senator from Illinois from March 4, 1855, to March 3, 1873.

June 7, 1852, Mr. Trumbull was elected a judge of the supreme court of Illinois for a term of nine years, and was duly commissioned June 24. May 19, 1853, he resigned this office, to take effect July 4, 1853. February 8, 1855, he was elected to the Senate of the United States for the term beginning March 4, 1855. The constitution of Illinois provided that the judges of the supreme court should not be eligible to any office of public trust or profit in the United States during the term for which they were elected, nor for one year thereafter, and that all votes for them for any elective office, given by the General Assembly, should be void. When Mr. Trumbull's credentials were presented in the Senate a protest of members of the Legislature was presented, protesting against the legality of the election on the ground that it was void by virtue of the provision of the constitution referred to. The subject was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, who reported that there was such a division of opinion as to render it proper to refer the subject to the Senate, and asked to be excused; which report was accepted by the Senate. A resolution declaring Mr. Trumbull entitled to his seat was then introduced and passed the Senate by a vote of 35 yeas and 8 nays. The arguments show that the Senators voting in favor of the legality of the election did so from different grounds; some proceeding upon the ground that this case did not come within the meaning of the clause of the State constitution referred to, because Mr. Trumbull had resigned the office of judge more than a year before his election to the Senate, and others proceeding upon the ground that a State can not superadd qualifications of a Senator to those required by the United States Constitution. (Taft's Senate Election Cases, page 148.)

All of which is respectfully submitted.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, May 6, 1887.

The governor received the following communication from Charles James Faulkner:

MARTINSBURGH, May 5, 1887.

To Governor E. W. WILSON:

The Legislature of West Virginia having elected me United States Senator from this State to fill the term commencing 4th of March, 1887, I hereby tender my resignation as judge of the thirteenth judicial circuit, to take effect at once. This prompt action is rendered necessary by the fact that the Jefferson spring term commences the 17th of May, and I am anxious that you should have every opportunity to consult those interested before naming my successor.

Very truly, yours,

CHAS. J. FAULKNER.

The resignation tendered in the foregoing communication is hereby accepted.

E. W. WILSON.

By the governor:
HENRY S. WALKER,
Secretary of State.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA, Office of Secretary of State:

I, Henry S. Walker, secretary of state of the State of West Virginia, do hereby certify that the foregoing and annexed writing is a true and correct copy of the resignation of Charles James Faulkner as judge of the thirteenth judicial circuit, and the acceptance of the same by the governor, as appear from the executive journal in my said office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the said State, at the city of Charleston, this 4th day of August, 1887.

[SEAL.]

HENRY S. WALKER,

SWEARING IN OF SENATORS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Secretary calls the roll of newly-chosen Senators, they will advance to the Chair to receive the official oath required by the Constitution, as prescribed by the law.

The Chief Clerk read the names of—

Nelson W. Aldrich, of the State of Rhode Island.

William B. Bate, of the State of Tennessee.

Rufus Blodgett, of the State of New Jersey.

William E. Chandler, of the State of New Hampshire.

As their names were called the respective Senators-elect came forward, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to them.

The Chief Clerk called the names of—

Francis M. Cockrell, of the State of Missouri.

John W. Daniel, of the State of Virginia.

Cushman K. Davis, of the State of Minnesota.

Henry L. Dawes, of the State of Massachusetts.

As their names were called the respective Senators-elect came forward, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to them.

The Chief Clerk called the names of—

George F. Edmunds, of the State of Vermont.

Charles James Faulkner, of the State of West Virginia.

James Z. George, of the State of Mississippi.

Arthur P. Gorman, of the State of Maryland.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to object, for the time being, to the administration of the oath to Mr. Faulkner, of West Virginia.

Perhaps I may interrupt the order of the Senate so far as to say that I understand that whatever question arises concerning the title of that gentleman to a seat arises upon the credentials themselves, the whole proceeding of the Legislature and the history of the case being there disclosed and fully recited. It seems proper, therefore, that the matter should be considered by a committee before the oath is administered; and I suppose I may, in accordance with the usages of the Senate, so far presume that I shall myself be a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections hereafter as to be able to give an assurance that the question shall be dealt with at the earliest possible moment, so that the gentleman entitled to the seat will be able to enter upon the discharge of his duties as Senator very soon.

Mr. KENNA. Mr. President, the course suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts seems eminently appropriate, and I trust that that action may be taken without the formality of a vote. I think the Senate will agree to it without division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made in one case, the oath of office will be administered to those Senators whose names have been called on whose credentials there is no question.

Messrs. Edmunds, George, and Gorman advanced to the desk of the President pro tempore, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to them.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I presume that without any action on the part of the Senate Mr. Faulkner will be entitled to the privileges of the floor until the contest is determined. I understand that to be the precedent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands the rule.

The Chief Clerk called the names of—

George Gray, of the State of Delaware.

Eugene Hale, of the State of Maine.

Joseph R. Hawley, of the State of Connecticut.

George Hearst, of the State of California.

As their names were called the respective Senators-elect came forward, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to them.

The Chief Clerk called the names of—

Frank Hiscock, of the State of New York.

Algernon S. Paddock, of the State of Nebraska.

Samuel Pasco, of the State of Florida.

Matthew S. Quay, of the State of Pennsylvania.

As their names were called the respective Senators-elect came forward, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to them.

The Chief Clerk called the names of—

John H. Reagan, of the State of Texas.

Philetus Sawyer, of the State of Wisconsin.

John Sherman, of the State of Ohio.

William M. Stewart, of the State of Nevada.

Francis B. Stockbridge, of the State of Michigan.

David Turpie, of the State of Indiana.

As their names were called the respective Senators-elect came forward, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to them.

Mr. Clerk, the tellers appointed to canvass the vote for Speaker have directed me to report that they agree in their tally, with this result: Whole number of votes cast, 312; of this number Mr. JOHN G. CARLISLE, a Representative-elect from the State of Kentucky, has received 163 votes; Mr. THOMAS B. REED, a Representative-elect from the State of Maine, has received 147; and Mr. CHARLES N. BRUMM, a Representative-elect from the State of Pennsylvania, has received 2.

The CLERK. The House has heard the report of the tellers, showing a total vote cast of 312, of which Mr. JOHN G. CARLISLE, a member-elect from the State of Kentucky, received 163 votes for the office of Speaker of this House; Mr. THOMAS B. REED, a member-elect from the State of Maine, 147 votes; and Mr. CHARLES N. BRUMM, a member-elect from the State of Pennsylvania, 2 votes. The Clerk, therefore, declares that JOHN G. CARLISLE, a Representative-elect from the State of Kentucky, is duly elected Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Fiftieth Congress. [Applause.] Mr. COX, of New York, and Mr. REED, of Maine, will please escort the Speaker-elect to the chair.

Mr. COX and Mr. REED conducted Mr. CARLISLE to the chair.

Mr. KELLEY, having served longest continuously as a member of the House, administered to the Speaker-elect the oath prescribed.

The SPEAKER then addressed the House as follows:

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, in assuming for the third time the duties of the laborious and responsible office to which you have just chosen me, I desire to tender my grateful thanks for the distinguished honor conferred, and to assure you that it will be my constant endeavor to justify the confidence you have reposed in me by a fair and impartial administration of the law governing your proceedings.

No length of service in this trying position can ever enable the incumbent to begin the labors of a new term without an oppressive feeling of embarrassment and apprehension. In fact, experience in this place increases rather than diminishes the sense of personal and official responsibility; and I can say without affectation that upon no previous occasion have I undertaken the discharge of my duties here with less confidence in my capacity to discharge them well or with a stronger feeling of dependence upon the support of others. None of us can hope to satisfy the just expectations of our respective constituents or to discharge the full measure of our responsibilities to the public at large unless we enter upon the important and difficult work before us with a determination to cultivate a spirit of forbearance and conciliation, and to assist each other at all times in the maintenance of order and decorum in our proceedings.

In his attempts to promote the prompt and regular transaction of the public business the presiding officer in a body like this is almost entirely dependent upon the co-operation of gentlemen upon the floor; and it is a very great encouragement to me to know from the experience of the past that he can always rely upon your active support when he is right, and upon your kind indulgence even when he is wrong. I shall doubtless have frequent occasion to invoke your indulgence, but I trust that you will never have just cause to complain that it has been abused.

Gentlemen, there has scarcely ever been a time in our history when the continued prosperity of the country depended so largely upon legislation in Congress as now, for the reason that the dangers which at this time threaten the commercial and industrial interests of the people are the direct results of laws which Congress alone can modify or repeal. Neither the executive department of the General Government nor the local authorities of the several States can deal effectively with the situation which now confronts us. Whatever is done must be done here; and if nothing is done the responsibility must rest here.

It must be evident to every one who has taken even a partial view of public affairs that the time has now come when a revision of our revenue laws and a reduction of taxation are absolutely necessary in order to prevent a large and dangerous accumulation of money in the Treasury. Whether this ought or ought not to have been done heretofore is a question which it would be useless now to discuss. It is sufficient for us to know that the financial condition of the Government and the private business of the people alike demand the prompt consideration of these subjects and a speedy enactment of some substantial measure of relief.

Unfortunately, gentlemen, we are menaced by dangers from opposite directions. While a policy of non-action must inevitably, sooner or later, result in serious injury to the country, we can not be unmindful of the fact that hasty and inconsiderate legislation upon subjects more or less affecting great financial and industrial interests might produce, temporarily at least, disturbances and embarrassments which a wise and prudent course would entirely avoid. Investments made and labor employed in the numerous and valuable industries which have grown up under our present system of taxation ought not to be rudely disturbed by sudden and radical changes in the policy to which they have adjusted themselves, but the just demands of an overtaxed people and the obvious requirements of the financial situation can not be entirely ignored without seriously imperiling much greater and more widely extended interests than any that could possibly be injuriously affected by a moderate and reasonable reduction of duties.

No part of our people are more immediately and vitally interested in the continuance of financial prosperity than those who labor for wages; for upon them and their families must always fall the first and most disastrous consequences of a monetary crisis; and they, too, are always the last to realize the benefit resulting from a return to prosperous times. Their wages are the first to fall when a crisis comes, and the last to rise when it passes away. Our effort should be to afford the necessary relief to all without injury to the interests of any; and it seems to me that course of legislation should be pursued which will guaranty the laboring people of the country against the paralyzing effects of a general and prolonged financial depression, and at the same time not interfere with their steady employment, or deprive them of any part of the just rewards of their toil. If this can be done—and I believe it can, if our deliberations are conducted with the wisdom and patriotism which the gravity of the situation demands—this Congress will have cause to congratulate itself upon an achievement which promises peace and prosperity to the country for many years to come.

Gentlemen, I know that these remarks may be considered somewhat out of the usual course, and perhaps not altogether pertinent to the occasion; but I believe you will excuse them because they relate to subjects which, as we assemble here to-day, are uppermost in the minds of all the people. Upon the correct solution of the questions which these subjects necessarily involve may depend not only the fate of political parties, but, what is far more important, the permanent welfare of the greatest and most intelligent constituency in the world.

Gentlemen, I thank you again most profoundly and sincerely for the conspicuous and honorable place to which you have assigned me, and without attempting to detain you longer, we will proceed to complete the organization of the House. [Loud applause.]

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS.

The SPEAKER proceeded to administer to the Members in attendance the oath of office. The Members and Delegates elect presented themselves as their names were called by States and Territories, and took the oath prescribed by section 1757 of the Revised Statutes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, was communicated to the House, as follows:

The President pro tempore appointed Mr. MORRILL and Mr. MORGAN as the said committee under the foregoing resolution of the Senate.

ELECTION OF CLERK, SERGEANT-AT-ARMS, ETC.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order is the election of the Clerk of the House.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, in order to complete the organization of the House, I propose the following resolution:

Resolved, That John B. Clark, jr., of the State of Missouri, be, and is hereby, elected Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Fiftieth Congress;

That John P. Leedom, of the State of Ohio, be, and is hereby, elected Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives of the Fiftieth Congress;

That Lycurgus Dalton, of the State of Indiana, be, and is hereby, elected Postmaster of the House of Representatives of the Fiftieth Congress;

That A. B. Hurt, of the State of Mississippi, be, and is hereby, elected Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives of the Fiftieth Congress; and

That Rev. W. H. Milburn, of the State of Illinois, be, and is hereby, elected Chaplain of the House of Representatives of the Fiftieth Congress.

Mr. CANNON. To the resolution offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] I offer the following amendment:

For Clerk, strike out "John B. Clark, jr., of the State of Missouri," and insert in lieu thereof, "Edward McPherson, of the State of Pennsylvania."

For Sergeant-at-Arms, strike out "John P. Leedom, of the State of Ohio," and insert "Daniel Sheperd, of the State of Illinois."

For Doorkeeper, strike out "A. B. Hurt, of the State of Mississippi," and insert "W. T. Fitch, of the State of Ohio."

For Postmaster, strike out "Lycurgus Dalton, of the State of Indiana," and insert "Charles H. Grey, of the Territory of Dakota."

For Chaplain, strike out "Rev. W. H. Milburn, of the State of Illinois," and insert "Rev. F. W. Thomas, of the State of Indiana."

Mr. BRUMM. I offer an amendment to the amendment, as follows:

Resolved, That all the names except that of Rev. William H. Milburn be stricken out, and that, in lieu thereof, the following be inserted:

For Clerk, Robert Shilling, of Wisconsin.
For Sergeant-at-Arms, E. W. Curray, of the State of Iowa.
For Doorkeeper, Thomas C. Oakly, of the State of North Carolina.
For Postmaster, James A. Campbell, of the State of Pennsylvania.
For Chaplain, Rev. W. H. Milburn, of the State of Illinois.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. BRUMM, and it was declared lost.

Mr. BRUMM. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and the amendment was rejected, only 3 members voting in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] ask for separate votes upon the several propositions embraced in the amendment?

Mr. COX. I do not.

The SPEAKER. The question then is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] as a substitute for the resolution offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

The substitute was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the resolution offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

The officers just elected presented themselves and took the prescribed oath of office.

2. Before said drawing shall commence, each seat shall be vacated and so remain until selected under this rule, and any seat having been selected shall be deemed forfeited if left unoccupied before the call of the roll is finished; and whenever the seats of Members and Delegates shall have been drawn, no proposition for a second drawing shall be in order during that Congress.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that when the Clerk shall call the name of any gentleman, time be allowed for him to choose his seat before the Clerk proceeds further.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will see that the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas is followed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent that the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] be allowed to select his seat without awaiting the formality of a drawing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE]? The Chair hears none.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 6, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF PROCEEDING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it the pleasure of the Senate to proceed to the transaction of morning business before the appointment of committees?

Mr. HARRIS. I suppose it is best to proceed with the presentation of memorials and the introduction of bills, to be referred when the committees are appointed.

Mr. HOAR. I think the custom of the Senate for a great many years was not to proceed with the transaction of any business, except what was peremptory in its nature, until after hearing from the Executive. That was considered a proper mark of deference to the Executive. I hope that the Senate will continue that custom, unless there be some good reason to the contrary.

Mr. SHERMAN and others. Let us take a recess.

Mr. HOAR. I will move that the Senate take a recess. I repeat for the Senator from Tennessee that I understand the ancient custom of the Senate was not to enter upon any ordinary business until after hearing the communication from the Executive at the beginning of the session. It was considered a mark of respect due from the legislative department of the Government to the Executive, and I hope the Senate will adhere to that custom.

Mr. HARRIS. I very cheerfully yield to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. President.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate take a recess for half an hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate take a recess for thirty minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and at the expiration of the recess (at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate reassembled.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. CLARK, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar of the Senate and delivered the following message:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled, that JOHN G. CARLISLE, a Representative from the State of Kentucky, has been elected Speaker, and that JOHN B. CLARK, jr., a citizen of the State of Missouri, has been chosen Clerk; and that the House of Representatives is ready to proceed to business.

It has also resolved that a committee of three be appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives, to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate, to wait on the President of the United States, and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make, and that Mr. COX, of New York, Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, have been appointed members of that committee on the part of the House.

RECESS.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess for fifteen minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and at the expiration of the recess (at 12 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the Senate reassembled.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MORRILL and Mr. MORGAN, the committee appointed in conjunction with a similar committee of the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States, appeared below the bar, and—

Mr. MORRILL said: Mr. President, the joint committee appointed to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the Senate and the House of Representatives had organized and were ready to receive any communication that he had to make, respectfully report that the President informed us that he would make a communication immediately in writing.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

At 12 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m., Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of the secretaries of the President of the United States, appeared below the bar, and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate sundry messages in writing.

The messages were received from the secretary and handed to the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the annual message of the President of the United States, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary of the Senate (Mr. ANSON G. MCCOOK) read the message, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

You are confronted at the threshold of your legislative duties, with a condition of the national finances which imperatively demands immediate and careful consideration.

The amount of money annually exacted, through the operation of present laws, from the industries and necessities of the people, largely exceeds the sum necessary to meet the expenses of the Government.

When we consider that the theory of our institutions guarantees to every citizen the full enjoyment of all the fruits of his industry and enterprise, with only such deduction as may be his share towards the careful and economical maintenance of the Government which protects him, it is plain that the exaction of more than this is indefensible extortion, and a culpable betrayal of American fairness and justice. This wrong inflicted upon those who bear the burden of national taxation, like other wrongs, multiplies a brood of evil consequences. The public treasury, which should only exist as a conduit conveying the people's tribute to its legitimate objects of expenditure, becomes a hoarding-place for money needlessly withdrawn from trade and the people's use, thus crippling our national energies, suspending our country's development, preventing investment in productive enterprise, threatening financial disturbance, and inviting schemes of public plunder.

This condition of our Treasury is not altogether new; and it has more than once of late been submitted to the people's representatives in the Congress, who alone can apply a remedy. And yet the situation still continues, with aggravated incidents, more than ever presaging financial convulsion and wide-spread disaster.

It will not do to neglect this situation because its dangers are not now palpably imminent and apparent. They exist none the less certainly, and await the unforeseen and unexpected occasion when suddenly they will be precipitated upon us.

On the 30th day of June, 1885, the excess of revenues over public expenditures after complying with the annual requirement of the sinking-fund act, was $17,859,735.84; during the year ended June 30, 1886, such excess amounted to $49,405,545.20; and during the year ended June 30, 1887, it reached the sum of $55,567,849.54.

The annual contributions to the sinking fund during the three years above specified, amounting in the aggregate to $138,058,320.94, and deducted from the surplus as stated, were made by calling in for that purpose outstanding three per cent. bonds of the Government. During the six months prior to June 30, 1887, the surplus revenue had grown so large by repeated accumulations, and it was feared the withdrawal of this great sum of money needed by the people, would so affect the business of the country, that the sum of $79,864,100 of such surplus was applied to the payment of the principal and interest of the three per cent. bonds still outstanding, and which were then payable at the option of the Government. The precarious condition of financial affairs among the people still needing relief, immediately after the 30th day of June, 1887, the remainder of the three per cent. bonds then outstanding, amounting with principal and interest to the sum of $18,877,500, were called in and applied to the sinking-fund contribution for the current fiscal year. Notwithstanding these operations of the Treasury Department representations of distress in business circles not only continued but increased, and absolute peril seemed at hand. In these circumstances the contribution to the sinking fund for the current fiscal year was at once completed by the expenditure of $27,684,283.55 in the purchase of Government bonds not yet due bearing four and four and a half per cent. interest, the premium paid thereon averaging about twenty-four per cent. for the former and eight per cent. for the latter. In addition to this the interest accruing during the current year upon the outstanding bonded indebtedness of the Government was to some extent anticipated, and banks selected as depositories of public money were permitted to somewhat increase their deposits.

While the expedients thus employed, to release to the people the money lying idle in the Treasury, served to avert immediate danger, our surplus revenues have continued to accumulate, the excess for the present year amounting on the 1st day of December to $55,258,701.19, and estimated to reach the sum of $113,000,000 on the 30th of June next, at which date it is expected that this sum, added to prior accumulations, will swell the surplus in the Treasury to $140,000,000.

There seems to be no assurance that, with such a withdrawal from use of the people's circulating medium, our business community may not in the near future be subjected to the same distress which was quite lately produced from the same cause. And while the functions of our National Treasury should be few and simple, and while its best condition would be reached, I believe, by its entire disconnection with private business interests, yet when, by a perversion of its purposes, it idly holds money uselessly subtracted from the channels of trade, there seems to be reason for the claim that some legitimate means should be devised by the Government to restore in an emergency, without waste or extravagance, such money to its place among the people.

If such an emergency arises there now exists no clear and undoubted executive power of relief. Heretofore the redemption of three per cent. bonds, which were payable at the option of the Government, has afforded a means for the disbursement of the excess of our revenues; but these bonds have all been retired, and there are no bonds outstanding the payment of which we have the right to insist upon. The contribution to the sinking fund which furnishes the occasion for expenditur in the purchase of bonds has been already made for the current year, so that there is no outlet in that direction.

In the present state of legislation the only pretense of any existing executive power to restore, at this time, any part of our surplus revenues to the people by its expenditure, consists in the supposition that the Secretary of the Treasury may enter the market and purchase the bonds of the Government not yet due, at a rate of premium to be agreed upon. The only provision of law from which such a power could be derived is found in an appropriation bill passed a number of years ago; and it is subject to the suspicion that it was intended as temporary and limited in its application, instead of conferring a continuing discretion and authority. No condition ought to exist which would justify the grant of power to a single official, upon his judgment of its necessity, to withhold from or release to the business of the people, in an unusual manner, money held in the Treasury, and thus affect, at his will, the financial situation of the country; and if it is deemed wise to in lodge the Secretary of the Treasury the authority in the present juncture to purchase bonds, it should be plainly vested, and provided as far as possible, with such checks and limitations as will define this official's right and discretion, and at the same time relieve him from undue responsibility.

In considering the question of purchasing bonds as a means of restoring to circulation the surplus money accumulating in the Treasury, it should be borne in mind that premiums must of course be paid upon such purchase, that there may be a large part of these bonds held as investments which can not be purchased at any price, and that combinations among holders who are willing to sell, may unreasonably enhance the cost of such bonds to the Government.

It has been suggested that the present bonded debt might be refunded at a less rate of interest, and the difference between the old and new security paid in cash, thus finding use for the surplus in the Treasury. The success of this plan, it is apparent, must depend upon the volition of the holders of the present bonds; and it is not entirely certain that the inducement which must be offered them would result in more financial benefit to the Government than the purchase of bonds, while the latter proposition would reduce the principal of the debt by actual payment, instead of extending it.

The proposition to deposit the money held by the Government in banks throughout the country, for use by the people, is, it seems to me, exceedingly objectionable in principle, as establishing too close a relationship between the operations of the Government Treasury and the business of the country, and too extensive a commingling of their money, thus fostering an unnatural reliance in private business upon public funds. If this scheme should be adopted it should only be done as a temporary expedient to meet an urgent necessity. Legislative and executive effort should generally be in the opposite direction and should have a tendency to divorce, as much and as fast as can safely be done, the Treasury Department from private enterprise.

Of course it is not expected that unnecessary and extravagant appropriations will be made for the purpose of avoiding the accumulation of an excess of revenue. Such expenditure, beside the demoralization of all just conceptions of public duty which it entails, stimulates a habit of reckless improvidence not in the least consistent with the mission of our people or the high and beneficent purposes of our Government.

I have deemed it my duty to thus bring to the knowledge of my countrymen, as well as to the attention of their representatives charged with the responsibility of legislative relief, the gravity of our financial situation. The failure of the Congress heretofore to provide against the dangers which it was quite evident the very nature of the difficulty must necessarily produce, caused a condition of financial distress and apprehension since your last adjournment, which taxed to the utmost all the authority and expedients within executive control; and these appear now to be exhausted. If disaster results from the continued inaction of Congress, the responsibility must rest where it belongs.

Though the situation thus far considered is fraught with danger which should be fully realized, and though it presents features of wrong to the people as well as peril to the country, it is but a result growing out of a perfectly palpable and apparent cause, constantly reproducing the same alarming circumstances—a congested national Treasury and a depleted monetary condition in the business of the country. It need hardly be stated that while the present situation demands a remedy, we can only be saved from a like predicament in the future by the removal of its cause.

Our scheme of taxation, by means of which this needless surplus is taken from the people and put into the public treasury, consists of a tariff or duty levied upon importations from abroad, and internal-revenue taxes levied upon the consumption of tobacco and spirituous and malt liquors. It must be conceded that none of the things subjected to internal-revenue taxation are, strictly speaking, necessaries; there appears to be no just complaint of this taxation by the consumers of these articles, and there seems to be nothing so well able to bear the burden without hardship to any portion of the people.

But our present tariff laws, the vicious, inequitable, and illogical source of unnecessary taxation, ought to be at once revised and amended. These laws, as their primary and plain effect, raise the price to consumers of all articles imported and subject to duty, by precisely the sum paid for such duties. Thus the amount of the duty measures the tax paid by those who purchase for use these imported articles. Many of these things, however, are raised or manufactured in our own country, and the duties now levied upon foreign goods and products are called protection to these home manufactures, because they render it possible for those of our people who are manufacturers to make these taxed articles and sell them for a price equal to that demanded for the imported goods that have paid customs duty. So it happens that while comparatively a few use the imported articles, millions of our people, who never used and never saw any of the foreign products, purchase and use things of the same kind made in this country, and pay therefor nearly or quite the same enhanced price which the duty adds to the imported articles. Those who buy imports pay the duty charged thereon into the public Treasury, but the great majority of our citizens, who buy domestic articles of the same class, pay a sum at least approximately equal to this duty to the home manufacturer. This reference to the operation of our tariff laws is not made by way of instruction, but in order that we may be constantly reminded of the manner in which they impose a burden upon those who consume domestic products as well as those who consume imported articles, and thus create a tax upon all our people.

It is not proposed to entirely relieve the country of this taxation. It must be extensively continued as the source of the Government's income; and in a readjustment of our tariff the interests of American labor engaged in manufacture should be carefully considered, as well as the preservation of our manufacturers. It may be called protection, or by any other name, but relief from the hardships and dangers of our present tariff laws, should be devised with especial precaution against imperiling the existence of our manufacturing interests. But this existence should not mean a condition which, without regard to the public welfare or a national exigency, must always insure the realization of immense profits instead of moderately profitable returns. As the volume and diversity of our national activities increase, new recruits are added to those who desire a continuation of the advantages which they conceive the present system of tariff taxation directly affords them. So stubbornly have all efforts to reform the present condition been resisted by those of our fellow-citizens thus engaged, that they can hardly complain of the suspicion, entertained to a certain extent, that there exists an organized combination all along the line to maintain their advantage.

We are in the midst of centennial celebrations, and with becoming pride we rejoice in American skill and ingenuity, in American energy and enterprise, and in the wonderful natural advantages and resources developed by a century's national growth. Yet when an attempt is made to justify a scheme which permits a tax to be laid upon every consumer in the land for the benefit of our manufacturers, quite beyond a reasonable demand for governmental regard, it suits the purposes of advocacy to call our manufactures infant industries, still needing the highest and greatest degree of favor and fostering care that can be wrung from Federal legislation.

It is also said that the increase in the price of domestic manufactures resulting from the present tariff is necessary in order that higher wages may be paid to our workingmen employed in manufactories, than are paid for what is called the pauper labor of Europe. All will acknowledge the force of an argument which involves the welfare and liberal compensation of our laboring people. Our labor is honorable in the eyes of every American citizen; and as it lies at the foundation of our development and progress, it is entitled, without affectation or hypocrisy, to the utmost regard. The standard of our laborers' life should not be measured by that of any other country less favored, and they are entitled to their full share of all our advantages.

By the last census it is made to appear that of the 17,392,099 of our population engaged in all kinds of industries, 7,670,493 are employed in agriculture, 4,074,238 in professional and personal service, (2,934,876 of whom are domestic servants and laborers,) while 1,810,256 are employed in trade and transportation, and 3,837,112 are classed as employed in manufacturing and mining.

For present purposes, however, the last number given should be considerably reduced. Without attempting to enumerate all, it will be conceded that there should be deducted from those which it includes 375,143 carpenters and joiners, 285,401 milliners, dressmakers, and seamstresses, 172,726 blacksmiths, 133,756 tailors and tailoresses, 102,473 masons, 76,241 butchers, 41,309 bakers, 22,083 plasterers, and 4,891 engaged in manufacturing agricultural implements, amounting in the aggregate to 1,214,023, leaving 2,623,089 persons employed in such manufacturing industries as are claimed to be benefited by a high tariff.

To these the appeal is made to save their employment and maintain their wages by resisting a change. There should be no disposition to answer such suggestions by the allegation that they are in a minority among those who labor, and therefore should forego an advantage, in the interest of low prices for the majority; their compensation, as it may be affected by the operation of tariff laws, should at all times be scrupulously kept in view; and yet with slight reflection they will not overlook the fact that they are consumers with the rest; that they, too, have their own wants and those of their families to supply from their earnings, and that the price of the necessaries of life, as well as the amount of their wages, will regulate the measure of their welfare and comfort.

But the reduction of taxation demanded should be so measured as not to necessitate or justify either the loss of employment by the working man nor the lessening of his wages; and the profits still remaining to the manufacturer, after a necessary readjustment, should furnish no excuse for the sacrifice of the interests of his employés either in their opportunity to work or in the diminution of their compensation. Nor can the worker in manufactures fail to understand that while a high tariff is claimed to be necessary to allow the payment of remunerative wages, it certainly results in a very large increase in the price of nearly all sorts of manufactures, which, in almost countless forms, he needs for the use of himself and his family. He receives at the desk of his employer his wages, and perhaps before he reaches his home is obliged, in a purchase for family use of an article which embraces his own labor, to return in the payment of the increase in price which the tariff permits, the hard-earned compensation of many days of toil.

The farmer and the agriculturist who manufacture nothing, but who pay the increased price which the tariff imposes, upon every agricultural implement, upon all he wears and upon all he uses and owns, except the increase of his flocks and herds and such things as his husbandry produces from the soil, is invited to aid in maintaining the present situation; and he is told that a high duty on imported wool is necessary for the benefit of those who have sheep to shear, in order that the price of their wool may be increased. They of course are not reminded that the farmer who has no sheep is by this scheme obliged, in his purchases of clothing and woolen goods, to pay a tribute to his fellow farmer as well as to the manufacturer and merchant; nor is any mention made of the fact that the sheep-owners themselves and their households must wear clothing and use other articles manufactured from the wool they sell at tariff prices, and thus as consumers must return their share of this increased price to the tradesman.

I think it may be fairly assumed that a large proportion of the sheep owned by the farmers throughout the country are found in small flocks numbering from twenty-five to fifty. The duty on the grade of imported wool which these sheep yield, is 10 cents each pound if of the value of 30 cents or less, and 12 cents if of the value of more than 30 cents. If the liberal estimate of six pounds be allowed for each fleece, the duty thereon would be 60 or 72 cents, and this may be taken as the utmost enhancement of its price to the farmer by reason of this duty. Eighteen dollars would thus represent the increased price of the wool from twenty-five sheep and $36 that from the wool of fifty sheep; and at present values this addition would amount to about one-third of its price. If upon its sale the farmer receives this or a less tariff profit, the wool leaves his hands charged with precisely that sum, which in all its changes will adhere to it, until it reaches the consumer. When manufactured into cloth and other goods and material for use, its cost is not only increased to the extent of the farmer's tariff profit, but a further sum has been added for the benefit of the manufacturer under the operation of other tariff laws. In the mean time the day arrives when the farmer finds it necessary to purchase woolen goods and material to clothe himself and family for the winter. When he faces the tradesman for that purpose he discovers that he is obliged not only to return in the way of increased prices, his tariff profit on the wool he sold, and which then perhaps lies before him in manufactured form, but that he must add a considerable sum thereto to meet a further increase in cost caused by a tariff duty on the manufacture. Thus in the end he is aroused to the fact that he has paid upon a moderate purchase, as a result of the tariff scheme, which, when he sold his wool seemed so profitable, an increase in price more than sufficient to sweep away all the tariff profit he received upon the wool he produced and sold.

When the number of farmers engaged in wool-raising is compared with all the farmers in the country, and the small proportion they bear to our population is considered; when it is made apparent that, in the case of a large part of those who own sheep, the benefit of the present tariff on wool is illusory; and, above all, when it must be conceded that the increase of the cost of living caused by such tariff, becomes a burden upon those with moderate means and the poor, the employed and unemployed, the sick and well, and the young and old, and that it constitutes a tax which, with relentless grasp, is fastened upon the clothing of every man, woman, and child in the land, reasons are suggested why the removal or reduction of this duty should be included in a revision of our tariff laws.

In speaking of the increased cost to the consumer of our home manufactures, resulting from a duty laid upon imported articles of the same description, the fact is not overlooked that competition among our domestic producers sometimes has the effect of keeping the price of their products below the highest limit allowed by such duty. But it is notorious that this competition is too often strangled by combinations quite prevalent at this time, and frequently called trusts, which have for their object the regulation of the supply and price of commodities made and sold by members of the combination. The people can hardly hope for any consideration in the operation of these selfish schemes.

If, however, in the absence of such combination, a healthy and free competition reduces the price of any particular dutiable article of home production, below the limit which it might otherwise reach under our tariff laws, and if, with such reduced price, its manufacture continues to thrive, it is entirely evident that one thing has been discovered which should be carefully scrutinized in an effort to reduce taxation.

The necessity of combination to maintain the price of any commodity to the tariff point, furnishes proof that some one is willing to accept lower prices for such commodity, and that such prices are remunerative; and lower prices produced by competition prove the same thing. Thus where either of these conditions exists a case would seem to be presented for an easy reduction of taxation.

The considerations which have been presented touching our tariff laws are intended only to enforce an earnest recommendation that the surplus revenues of the Government be prevented by the reduction of our customs duties, and, at the same time, to emphasize a suggestion that in accomplishing this purpose, we may discharge a double duty to our people by granting to them a measure of relief from tariff taxation in quarters where it is most needed and from sources where it can be most fairly and justly accorded.

Nor can the presentation made of such considerations be, with any degree of fairness, regarded as evidence of unfriendliness toward our manufacturing interests, or of any lack of appreciation of their value and importance.

These interests constitute a leading and most substantial element of our national greatness and furnish the proud proof of our country's progress. But if in the emergency that presses upon us our manufacturers are asked to surrender something for the public good and to avert disaster, their patriotism, as well as a grateful recognition of advantages already afforded, should lead them to willing co-operation. No demand is made that they shall forego all the benefits of governmental regard; but they can not fail to be admonished of their duty, as well as their enlightened self-interest and safety, when they are reminded of the fact that financial panic and collapse, to which the present condition tends, afford no greater shelter or protection to our manufactures than to our other important enterprises. Opportunity for safe, careful, and deliberate reform is now offered; and none of us should be unmindful of a time when an abused and irritated people, heedless of those who have resisted timely and reasonable relief, may insist upon a radical and sweeping rectification of their wrongs.

The difficulty attending a wise and fair revision of our tariff laws is not underestimated. It will require on the part of the Congress great labor and care, and especially a broad and national contemplation of the subject, and a patriotic disregard of such local and selfish claims as are unreasonable and reckless of the welfare of the entire country.

Under our present laws more than four thousand articles are subject to duty. Many of these do not in any way compete with our own manufactures, and many are hardly worth attention as subjects of revenue. A considerable reduction can be made in the aggregate, by adding them to the free list. The taxation of luxuries presents no features of hardship; but the necessaries of life used and consumed by all the people, the duty upon which adds to the cost of living in every home, should be greatly cheapened.

The radical reduction of the duties imposed on raw material used in manufactures, or its free importation, is of course an important factor in any effort to reduce the price of these necessaries; it would not only relieve them from the increased cost caused by the tariff on such material, but the manufactured product being thus cheapened, that part of the tariff now laid upon such product, as a compensation to our manufacturers for the present price of raw material, could be accordingly modified. Such reduction, or free importation, would serve beside to largely reduce the revenue. It is not apparent how such a change can have any injurious effect upon our manufacturers. On the contrary, it would appear to give them a better chance in foreign markets with the manufacturers of other countries, who cheapen their wares by free material. Thus our people might have the opportunity of extending their sales beyond the limits of home consumption—saving them from the depression, interruption in business, and loss caused by a glutted domestic market, and affording their employés more certain and steady labor, with its resulting quiet and contentment.

The question thus imperatively presented for solution should be approached in a spirit higher than partisanship and considered in the light of that regard for patriotic duty which should characterize the action of those intrusted with the weal of a confiding people. But the obligation to declared party policy and principle is not wanting to urge prompt and effective action. Both of the great political parties now represented in the Government have, by repeated and authoritative declarations, condemned the condition of our laws which permit the collection from the people of unnecessary revenue, and have, in the most solemn manner, promised its correction; and neither as citizens or partisans are our countrymen in a mood to condone the deliberate violation of these pledges.

Our progress toward a wise conclusion will not be improved by dwelling upon the theories of protection and free trade. This savors too much of bandying epithets. It is a condition which confronts us—not a theory. Relief from this condition may involve a slight reduction of the advantages which we award our home productions, but the entire withdrawal of such advantages should not be contemplated. The question of free trade is absolutely irrelevant; and the persistent claim made in certain quarters, that all efforts to relieve the people from unjust and unnecessary taxation are schemes of so-called free-traders, is mischievous and far removed from any consideration for the public good.

The simple and plain duty which we owe the people is to reduce taxation to the necessary expenses of an economical operation of the Government, and to restore to the business of the country the money which we hold in the Treasury through the perversion of governmental powers. These things can and should be done with safety to all our industries, without danger to the opportunity for remunerative labor which our workingmen need, and with benefit to them and all our people, by cheapening their means of subsistence and increasing the measure of their comforts.

The Constitution provides that the President "shall, from time to time, give to the Congress information of the state of the Union." It has been the custom of the Executive, in compliance with this provision, to annually exhibit to the Congress, at the opening of its session, the general condition of the country, and to detail, with some particularity, the operations of the different Executive Departments. It would be especially agreeable to follow this course at the present time, and to call attention to the valuable accomplishments of these Departments during the last fiscal year. But I am so much impressed with the paramount importance of the subject to which this communication has thus far been devoted, that I shall forego the addition of any other topic, and only urge upon your immediate consideration the "state of the Union" as shown in the present consideration of our Treasury and our general fiscal situation, upon which every element of our safety and prosperity depends.

The reports of the heads of Departments, which will be submitted, contain full and explicit information touching the transaction of the business intrusted to them, and such recommendations relating to legislation in the public interests as they deem advisable. I ask for these reports and recommendations the deliberate examination and action of the legislative branch of the Government.

There are other subjects not embraced in the departmental reports demanding legislative consideration and which I should be glad to submit. Some of them, however, have been earnestly presented in previous messages, and as to them, I beg leave to repeat prior recommendations.

As the law makes no provision for any report from the Department of State, a brief history of the transactions of that important Department, together with other matters which it may hereafter be deemed essential to commend to the attention of the Congress, may furnish the occasion for a future communication.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting certain papers in response to a Senate resolution of February 11, 1887, concerning the history of Indian operations on the plains, furnished by Col. Henry B. Carrington to the special commission which met at Fort McPherson, Nebr., in the spring of 1867. The papers in this case are very voluminous, and the Chair will, unless otherwise ordered, allow them to lie on the table without being printed until some committee has had time to inspect them.

ORDER OF PROCEEDING.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senate has no committees yet organized, and as I understand the custom, it has been that when bills and other papers are introduced they lie upon the table until the committees are appointed, which I think would be the creation of unnecessary work. So I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. FARWELL. Before that motion is put I desire to introduce a bill.

Mr. CULLOM. There are no committees yet.

Mr. FARWELL. The bill can be referred when committees are appointed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois insist on his motion to adjourn?

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senator from Illinois to withdraw it until I can offer a resolution.

Mr. CULLOM. I will withdraw it for that purpose. I make the motion for the reason that I understand it has been the custom of the Senate not to receive bills to be referred to committees when appointed; and as they are not yet appointed I think it would be unnecessary to introduce bills to be laid upon the table to be taken up again and referred.

Mr. BUTLER. I think there is great wisdom in the observation of the Senator from Illinois, but if the door is opened to the introduction of bills I shall insist that there shall be no restriction put upon that right. I hope, therefore, the motion of the Senator from Illinois will prevail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will remind Senators that the motion to adjourn is debatable only by unanimous consent.

Mr. CULLOM. I believe I shall insist on my motion.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to offer a resolution, and I hope the Senator will withhold the motion for that purpose.

Mr. CULLOM. I withdraw the motion for that purpose, as the resolution is not designed to go to a committee.

SUGAR MANUFACTURE PATENTS.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Agriculture be directed to inform the Senate whether any person in the employ of his Department in making experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum with money appropriated by Congress has applied for or obtained a patent, or patents, on any process connected with such manufacture, growing out of said experiments.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 8, 1887, at 12 o'clock m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. FARWELL. I think it ought to be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; it ought to go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, from which the original act came.

Mr. FARWELL. I think it should go to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would hold, in the absence of instruction, that the bill should be referred to the committee which reported the original measure. It is in the power of the Senate to dispose of the bill as it sees fit.

Mr. HARRIS. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance; on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HOAR. Is the motion amendable by substituting the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, it is not, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that a motion to refer is only amendable by adding instructions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When this matter was up originally on the question of oleomargarine, I was in favor of referring the original measure to the Committee on Finance, of which my honored colleague [Mr. MORRILL] is the chairman, but the Senate thought it ought to be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and it was so referred on discussion, and by a yea-and-nay vote of the Senate, if I rightly recollect. Now it is proposed to reverse that legislation. I think it due to the dignity of the Senate and the public interests of the country that the same committee which reported the original measure should reconsider on this bill its action, and report one way or the other as to whether the act ought to be repealed.

I hope, therefore, the Senate will not agree to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance, but will send it to the committee which originated the measure proposed to be repealed, in order that they may reexamine the question.

Mr. FARWELL. The bill contains another subject in addition to the one referred to by the Senator from Vermont. The principal object of the bill is to prevent the adulteration of food. I propose by the bill that every manufacturer of anything that is to be eaten shall label it so as to show what it contains, and I provide in the bill a penalty for not doing so.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois if the bill does not propose to repeal a tax?

Mr. FARWELL. Certainly; it proposes to repeal the tax on oleomargarine.

Mr. HARRIS. That is what I understood to be the purport of the bill.

Mr. FARWELL. That is one of the subjects contained in the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. And therefore I move its reference to the tax committee.

Mr. FARWELL. That is the committee to which I myself asked that it be referred.

Mr. PALMER. As the Senator from Vermont has stated, this question was thoroughly discussed when the matter came up in the last Congress. It seems to me that it would be a waste of time to send the bill to the Committee on Finance, and that it should go where the subject went last year. No matter whether it involves the question of a tax on the adulteration of food, they are cognate subjects in the bill, and it should go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The statement of my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL], that the bill contains also another subject, requiring the labeling and identification of all articles of food, or some articles of food, is an additional argument in favor of its being referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, who have had in charge the questions of the adulteration of food. That part of the bill certainly has no place in the Committee on Finance, which has to do with the revenues of the country.

Mr. MORRILL. Last year, when the original bill was before the Senate, on the question of reference, I voted to have it sent to the Committee on Finance, but I was very largely outvoted. It seems to me that the propriety of the reference now to the same committee which considered the original measure is supported by the fact that all the papers in relation to the matter were before that committee. I hope, therefore, the bill will not be sent to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FARWELL. If my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] has no objection, and will withdraw his motion, I shall move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I have no objection to that reference.

Mr. HARRIS. Both the arguments submitted by the two Senators from Vermont proceed upon the idea that in the last Congress the Senate committed a mistake against the judgment of those two Senators. Exactly why we should persevere in that mistake, I can not very well see. Exactly why we should follow a precedent simply because it is a precedent, and a wrong one, does not quite recommend itself to my judgment. But inasmuch as the Senator who introduces the bill expresses a preference that it shall go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and inasmuch as the chairman of the Committee on Finance asks that it go there, if the Senate will permit me to do so, the yeas and nays having been ordered, I will withdraw the motion, as I do not desire to force the bill upon a committee the chairman of which expresses a preference not to consider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the motion can be withdrawn only by unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The motion is withdrawn, and the bill is referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. FARWELL introduced a bill (S. 368) to regulate silver coinage, and amendatory of an act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 369) to regulate immigration; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also introduced a bill (S. 370) for the relief of Charles H. Adams; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also introduced a bill (S. 372) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also introduced a bill (S. 373) for the relief of women enrolled as army nurses, etc.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 374) to give the right of trial by jury to claimants of pensions, under the laws of the United States, whose applications have been rejected by the Secretary of the Interior on appeal from the decision of the Commissioner of Pensions; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 375) to restrict the use and sale of opium in the District of Columbia and the Territories of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also introduced a bill (S. 376) to extend to letter-carriers the advantages secured to other employés of the United States by section 3738 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the hours of labor; which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, if there be no objection.

Mr. BLAIR. That bill was at the last Congress referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and passed the Senate on the report of that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That reference will be made if there be no objection. The bill goes to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 377) granting a pension to Mary J. Nottage; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 378) to provide for the relief of claimants of pension under the general laws for time prior to the passage of special acts in their favor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 379) to allow soldiers and sailors in the United States service who have lost both arms an increased pension; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 380) to increase the rate of pension for deafness and loss of sight; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 381) for the relief of Col. Jesse H. Strickland; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 382) to relieve certain appointed or enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps from the charge of desertion; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 383) to limit ownership of lands now belonging to the public domain; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 384) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Dover, in the State of New Hampshire; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 385) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Nashua, in the State of New Hampshire; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 386) for the relief of William Trefethen, of Portsmouth, N. H.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 387) for the relief of Willis N. Arnold; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PALMER introduced a bill (S. 388) for the relief of L. P. Townsend, Louis L. Lovell, W. C. Page, Alonzo Sessions, Hampton Rich, Harvey Harter, Benjamin Harter, and Peter Hackett; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 389) for the relief of Thomas W. Lord; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 390) for the relief of Ida M. Howell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 391) to regulate the salaries and expenses of the circuit judges of the second judicial circuit; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 392) to regulate the salaries of the judges of the district courts of the United States within the State of New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EVARTS. I propose to accompany these bills, with the consent of the Chair, with a memorial relating to the subject, and ask that it be referred to the Judiciary Committee, and as it is from the Bar Association of the City of New York, that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be received and referred, with the bills, to the Committee on the Judiciary. The Senator from New York asks that it be printed at length in the RECORD.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator will withdraw that request. The printing of these things in the RECORD makes it immensely voluminous, and is a great expense. I doubt if it does any good to the public to do it. I do not object; I only appeal to the Senator to withdraw the request.

Mr. EVARTS. Certainly at this stage of the session the RECORD is not overloaded, and, therefore, perhaps it might find space for this memorial, which is the presentation of a large body in the State of New York. I hope my friend from Vermont will not object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only appeal to the sense of the Senator as to the propriety of his suggestion. I make no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the printing of the memorial at length in the RECORD? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the memorial?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The caption of the memorial will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A "Memorial to Congress of the committee of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York in relation to the salaries of judges of Federal courts in the State of New York, and resolutions of that body upon the same subject."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks that the memorial be printed at length in the RECORD, to which there is no objection.

The memorial is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The undersigned respectfully represent to your honorable body that on the 18th day of January, 1887, pursuant to a special call, a numerously attended meeting of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York was held for the purpose of taking into consideration the inadequacy of salaries paid to the judges of the Federal courts in the State of New York, at which meeting the annexed resolutions were passed, and in accordance therewith the undersigned have been appointed a committee to present the same to Congress.

And your memorialists further respectfully represent that there are, and, for many years past have been, special and cogent grounds for an increase of the compensation of those judges, and that at the last session of Congress your memorialists made an earnest effort to secure that result, but, although favorable entertainment of the proposal was accorded by the respective Judiciary Committees of the two Houses, the session was so far advanced that it became impracticable to carry the measure through all the forms of legislation before the final adjournment.

The considerations then urged still exist, and were then stated, and are now repeated, as principally three in number, namely:

First. The vastly greater amount of labor and service which is required of the judges.

Second. The greatly increased cost of living in the State, particularly in the city of New York and its vicinity, in which much of their time is necessarily passed.

Third. The scale of professional compensation in that State and city.

I.

Under the first of these heads it is scarcely necessary to suggest that the city of New York is not only the financial center of the country, but also the principal center of foreign and domestic commerce. The great railway companies and other corporate bodies of the nation have their main or branch offices there. The great bulk of the financial transactions of the whole country are there carried on. The maritime commerce of the nation with all other parts of the world finds its center at that place, and it is the great port of entry for foreign ships. Its own enormous population is constantly swelled by large numbers of people from other States of the Union and from foreign countries, drawn thither by the necessities of business, and who spend much of their time there.

These circumstances necessarily give rise to a great number and variety of Federal questions, and also furnish the grounds, conveniences, and facilities for invoking the Federal jurisdiction to a far greater extent than in any other State of the Union. It has been recently estimated—and your memorialists have no reason to doubt the moderation of the estimate—that over 40 per cent. of the entire litigation in the Federal courts of original jurisdiction in the whole country is brought before the courts of the United States in the cities of New York and Brooklyn.

II.

Under the second of the above heads, your memorialists believe that the fact of the increased cost of living in the city of New York is known to all, but perhaps all are not aware of the magnitude of the excess. An ordinary dwelling-house, suitable for a family of moderate habits and tastes, commands an average rental of at least $2,000 per annum, while the more desirable abodes, such as are occupied by lawyers of distinction in their profession, can not be obtained for sums less than $4,000 per annum.

These great rental values of necessity occasion corresponding additions to the cost of almost all other articles of necessary consumption in a family.

These facts are true, with some slight qualifications, of the cities and suburbs surrounding New York, and diffuse their influence throughout the whole State.

III.

In the third place, partly in consequence of the circumstances already alluded to, the scale of professional compensation is much higher in the city of New York than it is in other parts of the Union, especially in the more remote and rural districts. The professional incomes of lawyers, who possess the abilities and learning which fit them to discharge the duties of a Federal judge in that State, range from $10,000 to $40,000, and even above that amount, per annum. And yet it is believed that it is not easier with such incomes to gain a competency than it is with much smaller ones in other parts of the country.

It should be remembered that all the judges of the United States district courts within the State are almost constantly engaged in the discharge of their judicial duties in the city of New York, and this force is necessarily, from time to time, recruited by calling in the aid of the district judges of Vermont and Connecticut. No question can be made concerning the importance of these judicial labors, and of the learning, ability, and incessant toil required of the judges, nor that a suitable compensation should be paid to those who are called upon to discharge such important functions. And there can be no doubt that the salaries at present paid are totally inadequate for the decent support of a reputable lawyer, and the insufficiency is disparaging to the dignity, and, consequently, to the usefulness of the Federal tribunals. Nor do these salaries furnish, as they should, any sufficient guaranty for the filling of these important stations with the requisite learning, integrity, and ability.

Your memorialists call attention to the fact that it was but a few years since that a most competent and highly esteemed judge of a district court in this State was obliged to resign his office in consequence of the insufficiency of his salary, and it was principally in consequence of a happy accident that a competent successor was found able and willing to accept the office.

Your memorialists think it entirely reasonable to say that when occasion arises for filling a vacancy in any of the offices alluded to, the salary should be such that numbers of competent lawyers should be found who would feel that they could accept such offices without making an absolute sacrifice of the prospect of obtaining a reward for their services adequate to a comfortable maintenance.

As it is, upon the occasion of any vacancy, the Government is limited in its selection of a competent successor to those whose pecuniary condition renders the amount of salary a matter of comparative indifference, and the honorable ambition of those to whom judicial station is attractive, and who are best fitted to discharge its duties, is discouraged and repelled. Your memorialists are not in favor of any scale of compensation which would render these offices objects of desire and competition on account of the salaries alone, but they believe that they should be fixed at such sums as will make it easily possible to secure the learning, abilities, and character which are the necessary qualifications for such responsible and important places.

Under the present scale of compensation, the district judges receive salaries of but $4,000 per annum, which is less than the salary paid to the district judge of the northern district of California, who receives $5,000 per annum, and less than many salaries paid in the city of New York to clerks, book-keepers, cashiers, and salesmen in large mercantile and financial houses. The salaries of the circuit judges are but $6,000 per annum, out of which they are compelled to pay all their traveling and other expenses in going from place to place in the three States of their circuit, and, when necessary, they are obliged to incur, at their private expense, the further cost of stenographic clerical assistance. So that it may be said that their net incomes are less than those of some of the district judges, inasmuch as the latter who reside out of New York City receive a per diem allowance for expenses, and, in one case, extra compensation for services. These salaries are very much inferior to those paid to the judges of the courts of the State. The judges in the supreme court in the city of New York receive $17,500 per annum. The judges of the superior court of the city and of the court of common pleas of the county of New York each receives $15,000 per annum; the surrogate of the county of New York receives $12,000 per annum; police magistrates of the city receive $8,000, and judges of the districts (exercising civil jurisdiction corresponding to that of justices of the peace) receive $6,000 per annum.

The comparatively large salaries thus allowed to judges of the supreme and superior courts and the court of common pleas are indeed made up in part by sums paid by the city of New York in addition to the salaries allowed by the law of the State, but at the time your memorialists appealed to your honorable bodies at the last session the State paid to the chief judge of its court of appeals sitting permanently at Albany a salary of $9,500, and to the associate judges $9,000, and to those of the supreme court outside of the city of New York salaries of $6,000, with allowances to each of the latter for traveling and other expenses of $1,200 per annum. And recently the Legislature of the State has increased the salaries of the chief judge of the court of appeals to $10,500, and those of the associate judges of the same court to $10,000, with an allowance to each for traveling and other expenses of $2,000 per annum additional.

Since your memorialists last had the honor of addressing Congress in this behalf provision has been made for the appointment of an additional Federal circuit judge, and in order to fill it a lawyer of high standing has been induced to vacate the position of counsel to the corporation of the city of New York, with a salary of $12,000 per annum, upon the assurance of his friends, and the reasonable expectation, that the bar would use its energies to the utmost to induce Congress to provide for him a suitable maintenance in common with the other Federal judges.

Your memorialists think it would be entirely within the limits of moderation to pay to the circuit judges, respectively, salaries equal to those allowed by the general law of the State to the judges of the court of appeals prior to their recent increase, namely, the sum of $9,000 per annum, and to the district judges of the northern and eastern districts of New York salaries equal to those allowed by the State to the judges of the supreme court outside of New York City, namely, $6,000 per annum each, and to the judge of the district court of the southern district, in view of the cost of living in the city of New York, a salary of $7,000 per annum, and your memorialists pray that your honorable body may take appropriate action in the premises.

At a special meeting of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York held at No. 7 West Twenty-ninth street, January 13, 1887, Mr. Ellery E. Anderson presented the following resolutions:

"Resolved by the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, That in the opinion of this association the salaries now paid to the Federal judges within this State are entirely inadequate and bear no relation to the character and importance of the services rendered by them.

"Resolved, That the salaries paid to the judges of the courts of the United States within the State of New York are not only out of proportion to the salaries paid to the judges of the superior courts of record of the State for services of the same character and importance, but are insufficient to meet the cost of living and the suitable maintenance of their families; and that the disparity between the salaries paid to the judges of the State courts and those paid to the judges of the Federal courts tends to impair the dignity, independence, and usefulness of the latter, and makes it difficult to obtain men possessing the qualifications required for the discharge of the duties of these high offices.

"Resolved, That the greatly increased volume of business performed by the judges of the Federal courts within this State, as well as the responsibility forced upon them by the magnitude and complexity of the questions constantly brought before them for adjudication, demand that a reasonable discrimination in their favor should be made by Congress with respect to any legislation that may be proposed and adopted for the suitable and adequate compensation of Federal judges.

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this association that the judge* of the circuit court of the United States for the second circuit should be provided with and receive a salary of at least $9,000 per annum, with an additional allowance for traveling and other expenses of at least $2,000 per annum, and that the judge of the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York should be provided with and receive a salary of at least $7,000 per annum, and that the judges of the district courts of the United States for the northern and eastern districts of New York should each be provided with and receive salaries of at least $6,000 per annum.

"Resolved, That a committee of five members of this association be appointed by the president, with power to fill vacancies, and, in their discretion, to add to their number, not to exceed seven in all, to present these resolutions to Congress, and to advocate before that body and the proper committees thereof the correction of the evils herein referred to and to promote the reform hereby sought."

Which were unanimously adopted.

Mr. STANFORD. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. "Any lawful business." We do not know what that means, nor what is in the bill. It seems to me the bill ought to go to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Several SENATORS. To the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not know but that it ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary or the Committee on Foreign Relations; but the title would certainly appear to be sufficient to justify the President of this body in sending the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia, unless there was a request made to send it somewhere else. I do not know what "lawful business" means. What is lawful here ought certainly to be considered by the District Committee. If the Judiciary Committee is to exercise judicial authority in the District of Columbia, then there is no reason for having a District Committee, for the Commissioners can do everything here under the acts of Congress now, and the only thing that a District Committee is for is to pass on that legislation which is to come up from this time on. What has been done is done. I should like to know something about what the bill imports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can have the bill read at length, if he desires.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I prefer to have it read, so that the title may be understood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length.

Mr. STANFORD. I have no objection to the bill going to the Committee on the District of Columbia. Last year, however, it went to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. STANFORD introduced a bill (S. 422) to amend sections 2165, 2167, and 2170 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the naturalization of aliens; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 423) to enable the State of Colorado to select indemnity school-lands; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 561) providing an appropriation for the continuance of improvements at the mouth of the Columbia River; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 562) providing an additional appropriation for the purpose of continuing work on the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 563) providing an appropriation for the speedy completion of the improvements at the entrance to Yaquina Bay, Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 564) providing an appropriation for the improvement of the Umpqua River, Oregon, between Elkton and the mouth of said river; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 565) providing an appropriation for continuing the improvements at the entrance to Coos Bay, Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 566) making an appropriation for a final survey and estimates for, and the commencement of the construction of a boat-railway around the obstructions to navigation at The Dalles and Celilo Falls, in the Columbia River; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

He also introduced a bill (S. 567) for the erection of a public building at Yaquina City, Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 568) for the erection of a public building in the city of Salem, Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 569) making an appropriation for the resurvey, relocation, shortening, and improvement of the military wagon-road between Rogue River Valley and Fort Klamath, Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 570) for the relief of P. B. Sinnott, late Indian agent at Grand Ronde Agency, State of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 571) granting an increase of pension to Herman Baumhager; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask leave now to introduce two bills which I desire to have referred to the Committee on Finance. They are of a character that can not originate in the Senate, but I shall embrace the earliest opportunity to offer them as amendments to some proper revenue bill.

The bill (S. 572) to amend section 3020 of the Revised Statutes, referring to drawback duty on manufactured tin, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (S. 573) to amend section 3019 of the Revised Statutes, relating to drawback on duties on imported material when manufactured and exported, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 574) to increase the pension of Mrs. Apolline A. Blair; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 575) granting a pension to Mary O'Day; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 576) for the relief of Semon Bache & Co.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 577) for the relief of the American Grocer Association of the city of New York; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 578) to prohibit objectionable foreign immigration, encourage desirable immigration, defend American institutions, and protect American labor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also introduced a bill (S. 579) to provide for the retirement of Brig. Gen. Rufus Ingalls (retired) as a major-general of the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 580) to amend an act entitled "An act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, and so forth," approved March 3, 1887; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the bill lie on the table at present. At an early day I shall call it up for the purpose of submitting some remarks upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie upon the table.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 581) to reimburse settlers and purchasers on even-numbered sections of public lands within the limits of Congressional grants in cases of forfeiture of odd-numbered sections; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the bill may lie upon the table for the present. I shall endeavor to call it up at an early day and submit some remarks in favor of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie upon the table.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 582) abrogating all treaties heretofore made and now operative between the United States Government and the Chinese Empire, in so far as they, or any of them, provide for, recognize, or permit the coming of Chinese to the United States, and in so far as they, or any of them, inhibit the United States from absolutely prohibiting the coming of Chinese to the United States; and repealing all acts of Congress in so far as they, or any of them, recognize or permit the coming of Chinese to the United States; and absolutely prohibiting the coming of Chinese to the United States, excepting only diplomatic, consular, and other officers, and prohibiting the landing of any Chinese therein, excepting only such diplomatic and other officers; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 1) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to rent additional rooms for the use of the Bureau of Labor in collecting the statistics of and relating to marriage and divorce, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am advised that the First Comptroller of the Treasury, or some official at that end of the capital, has doubt as to whether the appropriation that was made at a former session for these objects will cover the payment of the rent of the rooms the officials have been obliged to hire; and I am advised by a gentleman in another place familiar with the matter that it is very desirable that this joint resolution shall pass as soon as may be; but as I am not willing to pass any joint resolution appropriating money (except in some very extreme cases) without a reference, I move that this be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I hope that they will consider it early.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 2) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering Congress to legislate upon the subjects of marriage and divorce, and prohibiting bigamy and polygamy; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that the joint resolution may lie on the table for the present, with a view of submitting some remarks upon it before it is referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will lie upon the table.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 3) for the amendment of the Constitution of the United States in regard to bigamy and polygamy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 4) providing for the disposition of undistributed copies of the Rebellion Records and other public documents; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. PUGH introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 5) in relation to the claim of John B. Read against the United States for the alleged use of projectiles for rifled ordnance claimed as the invention of said Read, and by him alleged to have been used pursuant to a contract or arrangement made between him and the War Department in 1856, for which no compensation has been made; also in relation to the claim of William E. Woodbridge based upon the plea of alleged priority in this line of invention; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PUGH. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire whether that joint resolution would not more properly go to the Committee on Patents. That class of questions has been, I think, almost always since I have been in the Senate dealt with by the Committee on Patents.

Mr. PUGH. The same measure was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs at the last Congress, and it has passed both Houses.

Mr. HOAR. My objection is to sending it to the Committee on Claims. It seems to me that the claim of an inventor to compensation for the use of his invention by the Government involves a kind of inquiry with which the Committee on Patents are familiar, and I know it has been very largely the practice of the Senate to send such bills to that committee. Indeed, I think this claim was before that committee when I was a member of it. If there be no objection, therefore, I suggest that it go to the Committee on Patents, and not to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reference of the joint resolution to the Committee on Patents?

Mr. PUGH. I have no objection, except that the claim has been in the other House and in the Senate before the Military Committee, and bills in favor of it have been reported in two Congresses. They have investigated and understand all the facts and merits of the case, and have made two reports in favor of the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I do not object to the Military Committee, but the Chair proposes to send it to the Committee on Claims. My objection is to sending it to the Committee on Claims, but I have no objection to its going to the Committee on Military Affairs, if the Senator prefers that reference.

Mr. PLATT. This bill, or a bill relating to this matter, at a former session, was referred to the Committee on Patents. The Committee on Patents did not report it favorably. At the next session it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, which did report it favorably, and now it is proposed to refer it to the Committee on Claims. That is the history of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it would be fair to refer this bill to the Committee on Patents, where it really ought to go, as it is a patent matter with which that committee is more familiar than any other committee can be. That is the proper reference, and I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Patents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. PUGH. The claim is founded on a contract with the Government for the use of this projectile constructed under the patent of John B. Read. It is a claim founded on a patent, the Government having contracted for the use of the projectile patented to this claimant. That is the only reason I had for asking the reference I did. The Military Committee have examined it; they are familiar with it; they have reported upon it twice, and a bill has passed both Houses, and the President would have signed it if it had ever reached him. I have no objection to the reference the Senator proposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As the Senator says he has no objection, I will not take the time of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Alabama to consent to the reference of the joint resolution to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. PUGH. I have really no preference myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will then be referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. PUGH introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 6) for the removal of all disability imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States upon Abram C. Myers; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 7) for the relief of Caroline M. Seton and Mary Jeannette Sibbald, heirs at law of Charles F. Sibbald, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 8) providing for the appointment of a commission to select a site for a naval station on the Pacific coast; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that that joint resolution lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 9) to authorize the printing of the recent special report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, Treasury Department, upon wool and the manufactures of wool; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 10) relating to the inclosure of certain points of especial interest on the battle-field of Gettysburgh; which was read twice by its title, and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 11) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

He also introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 12) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States in relation to the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of alcoholic liquors; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS FROM FILES.

Mr. BECK submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be directed to inquire into the advisability of requiring the papers on file in the office of the Secretary of the Senate at the expiration of the session of Congress to be taken from the files and referred to the committees to which the bills or petitions may be referred, without requiring a special order in each case.

Mr. BECK. If it takes two hours and a half to introduce bills, as has been the case to-day, it will take as long to have orders passed to withdraw the papers pertaining to them, and I hope the Committee on Rules will devise some way whereby that can be avoided.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I agree to that, only I think the rule is a very good one which forbids the trying over and over again of cases that are reported adversely. That the rule now forbids. So if the Committee on Rules is to consider the matter, to which I have no objection—for I do not object to the resolution—there is one part of the rule that is very wholesome. It is rather a common habit with us all if a bill is reported adversely at one session of Congress and the report is accepted, so that a decision is reached, for the representative of that constituent, naturally enough, to introduce another bill at the next session and try another committee on it, and go all over it again. This rule of the Senate was intended to try to make an end of something where it happened to be decided in favor of the United States; but I should be glad to have the committee examine the matter and see what can be done.

Mr. BECK. The Senator knows we have to get a special order of withdrawal in each case now, involving a great deal of labor. There is no objection to the reference, I understand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. None whatever.

Mr. HARRIS. A rule can be formulated so as to guard the point suggested by the Senator from Vermont and at the same time accomplish the object of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very likely; I do not object to the resolution at all.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

REDUCTION OF POSTAGE RATES.

Mr. BECK submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be, and it is hereby, directed to inquire into the advisability of reducing the rate of postage to 1 cent on all mail matter now known as first-class which does not exceed 1 ounce in weight, and a proportionate reduction on all excess of 1 ounce, and report to the Senate by bill or otherwise as soon as practicable.

Mr. BECK. I ask that the resolution lie on the table. I may introduce a bill to the same effect presently.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table.

GOVERNMENT POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, be directed to inquire into the advisability and practicability of establishing and maintaining a Government postal telegraph, with power to report by bill or otherwise.

CONDITION OF THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Whereas sections 11 and 14 of "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883, provide as follows:

"SEC. 11. That no Senator, or Representative, or Territorial Delegate of the Congress, or Senator, Representative, or Delegate elect, or any officer or employé of either of said Houses, and no executive, judicial, military, or naval officer of the United States, and no clerk or employé of any Department, branch, or bureau of the executive, judicial, or military or naval service of the United States, shall, directly or indirectly, solicit or receive, or be in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving, any assessment, subscription, or contribution, for any political purpose whatever, from any officer, clerk, or employé of the United States, or any Department, branch, or bureau thereof, or from any person receiving any salary or compensation from moneys derived from the Treasury of the United States.

"SEC. 14. That no officer, clerk, or other person in the service of the United States shall, directly or indirectly, give or hand over to any other officer, clerk, or person in the service of the United States, or to any Senator or Member of the House of Representatives or Territorial Delegate, any money or other valuable thing on account of or to be applied to the promotion of any political object whatever."

And whereas the spirit of said act has been interpreted, by the President and by the Commissioners of the Civil Service Commission charged with its execution, as forbidding all officers of the General Government from offensively participating in political conventions and elections, the President in his order addressed to the heads of the Departments in the service of the General Government, dated July 14, 1886, setting forth his reasons for the same as follows:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, July 14, 1886.

To the Heads of the Departments in the service of the General Government:

I deem this a proper time to especially warn all subordinates in the several Departments, and all office-holders under the General Government, against the use of their official positions in attempts to control political movements in their localities. Office-holders are the agents of the people—not their masters. Not only is their time and labor due to the Government, but they should scrupulously avoid in their political action, as well as in the discharge of their official duty, offending by a display of obtrusive partisanship their neighbors who have relations with them as public officials. They should also constantly remember that their party friends, from whom they have received preferment, have not invested them with the power of arbitrarily managing their political affairs. They have no right, as office-holders, to dictate the political action of their party associates or to throttle freedom of action within party lines by methods and practices which pervert every useful and justifiable purpose of party organization.

The influence of Federal office-holders should not be felt in the manipulation of political primary meetings and nominating conventions. The use by these officials of their positions to compass their selection as delegates to political conventions is indecent and unfair, and proper regard for the proprieties and requirements of official place will also prevent their assuming the active conduct of political campaigns. Individual interest and activity in political affairs are by no means condemned. Office-holders are neither disfranchised nor forbidden the exercise of political privileges, but their privileges are not enlarged, nor is their duty to party increased to pernicious activity by office holding. A just discrimination in this regard between the things a citizen may properly do and the purposes for which a public office should not be used is easy in the light of a correct appreciation of the relation between the people and those intrusted with official place and a consideration of the necessity under our form of government of political action free from official coercion. You are requested to communicate the substance of these views to those for whose guidance they are intended.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

And Commisioner Oberly, in his letter to the Illinois Democratic Association, dated September 29, 1887, interpreting the statute as follows:

"Now, does it not follow that officers, clerks, and other persons in the service of the United States who are organized for political purposes, and who, by initiation fees, dues, and contributions defray the expenses of this organization, are violating sections 11 and 14 of the civil service act? They are giving—they are handing over—to officers, clerks, or other persons in the service of the United States, and these persons, acting as officers of the association, as the representatives of the associated officers, clerks, and other persons in the service of the United States, are receiving money for political purposes, money to be applied to the promotion of political objects."

And whereas it is alleged that, notwithstanding the provisions of said act, and notwithstanding the interpretation placed upon the same by the authorities as above quoted, numerous Federal officers, appointed by the present administration, have unduly and offensively exhibited a pernicious activity both in nominating conventions and the elections following: Therefore,

Resolved, That a select committee, to consist of seven Senators, be, and the same is hereby, constituted and appointed, whose duty it shall be to examine fully into the present condition of the civil service in all branches of the Government, to ascertain whether the appointments in said service have been based upon merit and qualification, or have been distributed as partisan favors; and further, to fully examine and report as to the offensive participation of officers and employés of the General Government in political conventions and elections.

Said committee is hereby authorized to employ a clerk and stenographer, and shall have power to administer oaths, send for persons and papers; to sit in Washington or such other places as may be necessary, and to conduct its investigations through subcommittees, the expenses of the same to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, and a full report of its proceedings shall be made to the Senate at as early a day as is practicable.

Mr. HALE. Let the resolution lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table.

Mr. BUTLER. Will it not be printed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed.

Mr. HALE. Having been read, it will be printed, of course.

PRINTING OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE, ETC.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed, in pamphlet form, for the use of the Senate, 1,000 copies of the annual message of the President, and the reports proper of the heads of the Departments, Comptroller of the Currency, Director of the Mint, and Treasurer of the United States, without the appendices.

MRS. VIRGINIA POORE.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Mrs. Virginia Poore, widow of Maj. Ben: Perley Poore, deceased, late clerk to the Senate Committee on Printing, an amount equal to six months' salary as clerk aforesaid; said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

PRINTING OF PAPERS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I introduced a bill this morning for the erection of a public building at Omaha, with some accompanying papers. I request that the papers, which are quite voluminous, may be printed for the use of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—the usual number. I ask that the order to print may be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

GOODLOE'S INTERNAL-REVENUE COMPILATION.

Mr. VANCE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 3,000 copies of the compilation of the internal-revenue laws of the United States, with a history of the legislation in regard thereto from the organization of the Government to the present time, by D. R. Goodloe, of which 750 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,500 copies for the use of the House, and 750 copies for the use of the Treasury Department.

Mr. VANCE. I submit the manuscript to which the resolution refers, and ask its reference with the resolution to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution with the accompanying paper will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to have the following orders made:

Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers in the case of the Catholic Church at Chattanooga, Tenn., be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Ordered——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let all the orders be adopted, subject to the rule.

Mr. HARRIS. There are quite a number of orders of the same character. They need not be read. They are taken subject to the rule, of course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will direct that the orders be entered, and that the requests be granted, subject to the rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to suggest in the same connection that in all cases of bills which have been presented to-day, where there have been former reports not adverse, the papers be ordered to be referred to the appropriate committees by a general order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think that is a good suggestion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that in all cases of bills introduced to-day the papers on file, no adverse report having been made, shall be forwarded to the respective committees. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRIS. Then these orders of mine need not be entered. Let them go under the general rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The orders of the Senator from Tennessee are included in the general order just made.

Mr. EVARTS. I hand in an order to take papers from the files which perhaps are not included under the general provision.

The order was read, as follows:

Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers in the claim of G. Colden Tracy, of the State of New York, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator please explain what the state of that case is? Why does it not come within the order unanimously adopted?

Mr. EVARTS. The only knowledge I have is this order handed me. I did not present the petition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then let the order be granted subject to the rule.

Mr. EVARTS. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be granted subject to the rule.

EXEMPTIONS FROM DUTY.

Mr. PLATT submitted the following resolution; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance is hereby instructed to inquire into the propriety and expediency of exempting from duty, to a limited extent, articles which may be contained in the personal baggage of any passenger arriving at any port of entry: Provided, That the articles so exempted are not intended for sale, and that all other dutiable articles contained in such baggage shall have been duly declared by such passenger.

OPEN EXECUTIVE SESSIONS.

Mr. PLATT. As I am required by the rules to do, I give notice that on to-morrow I shall introduce a resolution in amendment of clauses 2, 3, and 4 of Rule XXXVI, clause 3 of Rule XXXVII, clause 2 of Rule XXXVIII, for the purpose of providing that hereafter the Senate shall consider and act upon treaties and executive nominations in open session, except when it shall be otherwise ordered.

PACIFIC COAST STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all letters or other communications in his Department relating to the recent bonding of the Pacific Coast Steamship Company, together with copies of all other papers touching said transaction.

JUDGMENTS OF FEDERAL COURTS.

Mr. GEORGE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of amending the laws of the United States in relation to liens of judgments rendered in the courts of the United States so as to regulate such liens, as near as may be, by the laws of the several States in which said judgments may be rendered.

RAILROAD RECEIVERS.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to report, by bill or otherwise, such legislation as may be necessary to prevent the courts of the United States, in managing railroads through receivers, from depriving lawful creditors of their liens on said railroad and corporate properties by the sale of the properties under receivers' certificates issued under the order of said courts, whereby the title to great railroad properties and vast bodies of the public land of the people of the United States, having a power of taxation over the people, is vested in favorites and combinations of persons selected and approved by the receiver and his confederates.

Mr. CALL. I ask that the resolution be placed on the Calendar, in order that I may call it up hereafter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

SENATOR FROM WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the credentials of Mr. Faulkner as a Senator from the State of West Virginia, the memorial of Mr. Lucas, and all other papers on the files of the Senate relating to the title to the seat from the State of West Virginia, be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 13, 1887, at 12 m.

PROPOSED TERRITORY OF CIMARRON.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present to the House of Representatives the petition of Owen G. Chase, who claims to be elected a delegate from the territory of Cimarron. The petition will explain itself, and since it is not very long I ask that it be read for the information of the House.

There being no objection, the petition was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned, a citizen of the United States, and a resident of Cimarron territory, commonly called "The Public Land Strip," respectfully begs leave to submit to the House of Representatives that there are now at least 10,000 American citizens who are bona fide settlers in the said territory; that they are without the protection of local or general laws; that they have been compelled by the necessities of their situation to establish, and they have established and are maintaining, a provisional government, by and for the people, in form truly republican, for their common protection, safety, and welfare. The justification for the establishment of this government over a part of the public domain of the United States must rest upon the necessities of a great community of American citizens otherwise without public law, the well-recognized obligation of self-protection and defense, and the inalienable right of local self-government.

The Public Land Strip was acquired from Texas in 1850. It is bounded on the east by the Cherokee Outlet, on the south by the Panhandle of Texas, on the west by the Territory of New Mexico, and on the north by Colorado and Kansas.

It contains 5,761 square miles, or 3,687,684 acres of excellent agricultural lands. It is well watered with deep running streams of soft, fresh water. It contains exhaustless quarries of building stone, marble, chalk, and bituminous coal.

It is a natural fruit garden, where grapes, plums, and other fruits grow wild and of very superior quality. The people are law-loving and law-abiding, and will never consent to harbor thieves and desperadoes.

In November, 1886, a petition was circulated and numerously signed by leading citizens, appointing a public meeting to convene at Beaver, November 29, 1886. This meeting was attended by a large proportion of the people, and a code of by-laws was adopted, and resolutions unanimously indorsed appointing an election to be held February 22, 1887, to elect nine councilmen (three from each meridian district), who should meet in Beaver March 4, 1887, to act as a territorial council and adopt such measures as, in their judgment, might seem best; and to organize some form of government.

At the appointed time seven of the nine councilmen assembled, canvassed all the election returns, and it appearing that two councilmen had been elected who were ineligible, their places were filled by the selection of the two receiving the next highest number of votes.

The council then organized by electing O. G. Chase president, and Merrett Magann as secretary. The usual oath having been taken, resolutions were at once adopted dividing the territory into three senatorial districts by meridian lines, and seven delegate districts by township lines; and another election ordered to come off November 8, 1887, for the election of nine senatorial councilmen and fourteen delegate councilmen from their respective districts.

The first council passed laws or acts regulating the rights of matrimony, chattel mortgages, mechanics' liens, etc., all of which have been duly respected and enforced so far as made known.

Such publication of the laws and acts of the territorial legislature was made as the best facilities of the territory allowed.

Public schools have been established, churches organized, and every possible effort made by the people, in their primary capacity, to prepare for a legal Territorial government.

At the election held to elect a representative in Congress your petitioner received a majority of all the votes cast, and the representatives to the senatorial and legislative council were again elected. Returns of the second election, as will be seen by the printed documents herewith submitted, were made to the secretary of the first council, with a view of being canvassed by the incoming council.

From the returns made in regular form, all on printed blanks, it appears that the second election was conducted regularly, and twenty-three good representative men were elected—nine senators and fourteen delegates.

The new council convened at Beaver December 5, 1887, and is therefore in session at this time. From time to time the undersigned will be glad to lay before Congress its legislative actions for information.

The proceedings leading up to the final establishment of this provisional government were peaceful and orderly; were participated in by, practically, all the people, and at every step were marked by the sanction of a voluntary oath to support the Constitution of the United States. They are in perfect accord and harmony with the principles of Territorial government uniformly sanctioned by Congress, and are the patriotic and conscientious work of a law-abiding people, devoted to the institutions of their country.

The formal record of their proceedings and of the laws enacted by the provisional council has been duly kept and published, and will be submitted hereafter.

In direct pursuance of the will of the people of the territory, the undersigned was duly chosen as a delegate to the Fiftieth Congress, and he herewith presents the certificate of his election, attested by the adopted seal of said territory and the signature of the territorial secretary.

Respectfully and humbly appealing for such recognition as the House of Representatives may be graciously inclined to give to a large body of respectable, patriotic, and law-abiding citizens of the United States struggling for order, liberty, and law, the undersigned submits, in their behalf and in their name, his hope that he may be permitted in the House of Representatives to voice their interests and desires.

Very respectfully,

OWEN G. CHASE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 12, 1887.

Mr. SPRINGER. I submit a resolution for present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the petition and certificate of election of Owen G. Chase, claiming to be elected a delegate from the territory of Cimarron, be referred to the Committee on the Territories, when appointed; and that pending the consideration of the organization of a Territorial government for said territory, Mr. Chase be entitled to the privileges of the floor of the House, the same as is now accorded to contesting members.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the latter part of that resolution will not be accepted by the House. Let the whole question be referred to the Committee on the Territories.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to yield the floor to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS], who represents a district immediately adjoining the strip of land from which it is proposed to organize this territory.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is that resolution in order at this time?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. DUNHAM. Under what rule of the House?

The SPEAKER. Under the general parliamentary law of the country, which permits the introduction of a proposition whenever a gentleman is recognized for that purpose. It is for the House, of course, to say what it will do with the proposition. It may refer it to a committee, lay it upon the table, or refuse to pass upon it in any shape.

Mr. DUNHAM. We have no rules of the House now.

The SPEAKER. The question is determined by the general rules of parliamentary practice.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, the tract of land to which reference is made in that petition is what is commonly called "No Man's Land," and lies immediately south of the district I have the honor to represent upon this floor. It is a body of land which offers many inducements to settlement, being quite fertile, and has already a considerable population settled upon it.

As stated in the memorial which has been read here, the resident population of that region—numbering about 10,000 persons—held an informal election for the purpose of selecting a delegate to come here to Congress and represent the interests of the settlers upon that strip. They are desirous of forming a Territorial government, if possible, or at all events of having some legislation which will give them the protection and benefits of the law of the land. At present there is no legal machinery of any kind by which they can acquire title to the lands upon which they have settled. There is no law to protect them in the property they may take with them into the territory; there is no law that protects them or their persons or property from violence while in the territory; there is no law in that section by which they can collect any debt or obligation which may be contracted, and there is no law by which the people of Kansas, or of New Mexico, or of Arkansas can collect any obligation that may be contracted with a settler upon this No Man's Land. There is the utmost need of some legislation touching this land, for it is virtually outside of the pale of the law, and outside of the United States in that respect, although geographically within its limits.

This man who presents the memorial here has been selected by a majority of the voters of this strip as a delegate to represent them and their interests on the floor of this House. He desires permission to come upon the floor of the House for the purpose of seeing members who wish to ask questions in reference to this land, so that they may be able to do this without being called out into the lobby.

He is an old gentleman of most excellent character, and I can assure the members of this House that he will not in any manner bore them with the business before them, but will be here ready to answer any question that members may desire to propound.

I hope the resolution will be adopted giving him the same privileges upon the floor of this House that are now accorded to contesting Delegates.

Any question that gentlemen may desire to ask in reference to this land I will take much pleasure in answering if the House will indulge me for a few moments.

Mr. COX. I desire to ask if this resolution can be divided. There are two matters in it to be discussed and passed upon.

The SPEAKER. The resolution, the Chair thinks, is divisible.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to the division of the resolution. I desired the gentleman from Kansas, whose district lies nearest to this territory, to state the case. Has the gentleman from Kansas concluded his remarks?

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kansas, what is the extent of this territory?

Mr. PETERS. It is 130 miles long by about 50 miles wide.

Mr. WEAVER. Five times as large as the State of Rhode Island.

Mr. DUNHAM. How does it compare with the State of Iowa?

Mr. SPRINGER. The first part of this resolution simply refers the petition to the Committee on Territories. The second proposition allows the gentleman claiming to be the delegate from that Territory the privilege of the floor, the same as is accorded to gentlemen contesting seats in this House. The gentleman from New York desires the proposition to be divided; to that I have no objection whatever. Hence the first motion submitted to the House will be on referring the petition to the Committee on Territories. The second will be a vote whether, pending the consideration of the resolution, the House will allow the gentleman to come upon the floor, the same as a contesting member.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether this is an organized Territory.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is.

Mr. BLOUNT. By what authority?

Mr. SPRINGER. By the authority which always adheres to any people that find themselves without a government.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has it been recognized as a Territorial government?

Mr. SPRINGER. It has not. Neither was California recognized until it formed a provisional government and asked to be admitted into the Union. The people there, 10,000 in number, have formed a provisional government, have elected a senate and house of delegates and a delegate to Congress; but they are under no law. They ask that their territory be organized into a Territorial government; that our land laws be extended over them, and that they may acquire titles to the places they have occupied.

There is nothing in this resolution which recognizes their right to a Territorial government. It is simply the question of the reference of a petition. This gentleman represents a large portion of our citizens who come here asking to be recognized, and my proposition is that the petition be referred to the Committee on Territories. I yield for a few moments to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. I think we are commencing at the wrong end of this business. We do not want two kinds of Territories with two kinds of representation from Territories. I do not think a contest as to a Territory in futuro should be called up for reference in this House or otherwise. The gentleman from Illinois has cited the case of California as a precedent. I know the facts connected with that, and they gave rise to infinite trouble. I shall make a motion at the proper time to lay the second branch of the proposition on the table. I will make that motion now if it be in order; to lay on the table the second branch of the proposition, while allowing the first part of it to be referred to the Committee on Territories, or the Committee on Elections, or whatever committee has jurisdiction in the matter.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the motion to lay on the table is not now in order. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not desire to occupy five minutes. The resolution provides for the disposition of two topics. It has been uniformly the case, so far as I know, before such matters are acted upon by the House, for the House to determine as to the disposition of its work under the rules. Under the rules of the House there would be no difficulty on the part of the Speaker in disposing of this matter. It seems to me we are going forward too rapidly, and that until the rules are adopted and the work assigned to the different committees, we should not take up this particular case. It does not become the House to do business in that way, and I trust the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] will prevail.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES].

Mr. SYMES. I desire to say a few words merely for the information of the House on this subject, as I had occasion to investigate it in the last Congress on the Territorial Committee.

This is a strip of land 130 miles long and 30 miles wide. It lies about two-thirds south of Kansas and one-third south of Colorado. This is the only strip of land within the boundaries of the United States of America over which the Government has extended no jurisdiction, executive, judicial, or legislative, or land office, by any act of Congress. It was acquired by the United States from the State of Texas about the time that Texas was admitted into the Union.

Some law undoubtedly ought to be passed and ought to have been passed heretofore extending some kind of authority over that strip of land.

Mr. COOPER. Did we not in the last Congress pass a law extending the jurisdiction of the United States district court of Kansas over this strip?

A MEMBER. That law was not signed by the President.

Mr. SYMES. Such a law was passed, but it was not signed by the Executive. Hence I am correct in my statement that no law extending any character of Federal jurisdiction has ever been enacted applicable to this strip of land.

Mr. PETERS. I will state that the bill extending the jurisdiction of the United States district court over this No Man's Land and attaching it to the Garden City land office for land purposes passed the House and the Senate and reached the President two days before the adjournment of Congress, and was not signed by him.

Mr. SYMES. I said that bill had not become a law.

I do think, sir, Federal jurisdiction ought to be extended over this piece of land. Up to two or three years ago it was nothing but a cattle range. Now the eastern portion of it is being settled up by farmers and ranchmen. They ought to have land-office rights; they ought to have the protection of the Federal Government. I desire merely to say this much to the House in order that they may vote intelligently upon the pending proposition, and I can see no objection to the admission to the privileges of this floor of a representative of these people in the way of a delegate, for the purpose of acting, we may say, as a sort of "lobby" member to look after their interests. That question, however, I do not desire to discuss, as other gentlemen have it in charge.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will ask the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES] whether those settlers are on those lands by any authority of law; whether, as matter of fact, they are not simply squatters and trespassers there, without any title whatever?

Mr. WEAVER. They are not trespassers.

Mr. PETERS. They are not trespassers; they are squatters.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Speaker, by a prescriptive law as old as this country, they are not trespassers; by the decisions of the courts they are not trespassers. You may denominate them squatters if you see fit, but that is not an odious term as I understand it. However, they certainly have as much right there as any settlers that ever settled in the Western country, and ought to be protected by the Federal Government.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But it is admitted that they have no title.

Mr. SYMES. Certainly they have no fee-simple title, because, as I have said, no law has ever been enacted which gives any land office authority to accept pre-emption or homestead filings or entries.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of admitting every community when it is sufficiently large to organize a government and send its representatives here. I am in favor of admitting every community into the family of States when it is sufficiently large and populous. But that is a question which this House must determine for itself beforehand, and we should not adopt a resolution admitting to this floor any delegate to represent these people until a committee of the House has examined the preliminary question and passed upon it and submitted its report to the House.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] cites as a precedent the case of California, but, as every gentleman here remembers, California had a large population. But there is another question to which I will call the attention of my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]. During the Forty-seventh Congress I was a member of the Committee on Territories, then presided over by my friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]. A gentleman came to this House from the Territory of Alaska, and claimed to have been elected as a Delegate to Congress from that Territory, having at the time perhaps three or four hundred wild Indians behind him as his constituents. He was not admitted to this House, but the question of his admission was referred to the Committee on Territories for investigation and report to the House. Now, sir, in this case, as in the case of Alaska, the question is a question of fact; it is a question which this House must investigate and determine for itself, whether the people asking the admission of this representation are sufficiently numerous to be entitled to a Territorial organization, and to have a representative on this floor. If it proves, after investigation by the Committee on Territories, that their claim is well founded, I shall certainly be willing to vote to accord them representation on this floor; but, as I have said, the question must first be passed upon by a committee of this House before we can properly act upon it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield now to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER], who was a member of the Committee on Territories in the last Congress.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I see no objection to the passage of this resolution, and it seems to me eminently proper that it should be acted upon favorably by the House. The territory in question is a portion of the land which it was proposed to incorporate into the Indian Territory, for which purpose a bill was introduced in the last Congress. This strip, as has been stated by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES], is about 130 miles long and 30 or 40 wide. The title to the lands is involved in certain treaties made many years ago between the United States and the civilized tribes of Indians now dwelling in the Oklahoma territory, the Cherokee lands, so called. Of course, in the consideration of creating a Territory there, these Indian titles must be taken into account and disposed of. It is fair to presume that the gentleman who has been sent here by these people is here for the purpose of promoting their interest, and encouraging proper legislation for the protection of that territory and its people. There are, I understand, about 10,000 people there now, squatters, without any right or authority of law; but I understand also that they have exercised a protective influence over the lands and have prevented, to some extent at least, unlawful depredations.

The memorial which has been presented proposes certain legislation, and it is contemplated to introduce a bill for the purpose of carrying that legislation into effect. What shall be found advisable in the premises is for the Committee on Territories to recommend, and it is for this House to act upon that recommendation; but pending such action I think it is proper that this gentleman should be admitted to the floor in order that he may be interviewed by members, and may have an opportunity to communicate intelligence in regard to the territory and the wants of the people.

Mr. STEELE. Is not this the same country from which Payne and his followers were driven by the Government officers?

Mr. PETERS. Oh, no. That was Oklahoma.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I do not understand that this is the same territory. In the last Congress I opposed the creation of the Territory of Oklahoma, and I stand upon the same ground to-day; but it seems to me proper that some legislation should be enacted extending over this region the authority of the laws of the United States.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. With what object does the gentleman rise?

Mr. JACKSON. To submit a few remarks upon this question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I think that the question is not now before the House whether there should be law extended over this strip of territory and whether the people residing on it should have relief. The proposition to refer this resolution to the Committee on Territories leaves that an open question, and we perhaps all agree that some legislation concerning this strip of land is most urgently needed.

But I apprehend that there is danger in the House committing itself to the proposition contained in the concluding portion of the resolution, and I am opposed to its passage. To admit a gentleman to the floor of the House purporting to be a delegate, and to give him the rights and privileges of Delegates from regularly organized Territories, seems in some sense at least to recognize this as a Territorial division of the country duly constituted as such. No one, I presume, would seriously advocate that such a small strip of land as this should have a separate Territorial organization and government. It does not need it now, and the most sanguine can not fix the time when we could contemplate its admission into the Union as a State. It never will be entitled to admission as a State, and no one expects it to be.

I would be glad to see legislation that would open these lands to legal settlement and do justice to all.

But it is suggested by the gentleman from Kansas that we should admit the gentleman who purports to be a delegate to a seat on this floor, that he may act as lobbyist in behalf of the people he comes here to represent. There is no need of this, and I dislike even the name of lobbyist when associated with legislation, although I know very well that the gentleman has no reference to any improper action in his suggestion. We all regard it as improper to admit here on this floor an ex-member, who is otherwise entitled to the privilege, when he comes in the character of a lobbyist. But whilst I consider it very objectionable that men coming here in such capacity should be recognized in any way by Congress, I do not wish to be understood as reflecting in the least on the gentleman named in the resolution. I have no doubt he would conduct himself honorably. My objection is to the reason given for his admission. Further, I do not wish that there shall hereafter come before us a question whether this gentleman is entitled to mileage and pay as a delegate, representing, under authority of law, a properly organized Territory, which may be the result if we permit him to occupy the very peculiar position he would have under the concluding portion of this resolution.

I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] for his courtesy in yielding to me, and further, if he will permit me, I will move to amend his proposition by striking out all after the words providing for a reference of the subject to the Committee on the Territories. The effect of my motion would be to strike out that portion of the resolution which proposes to admit this gentleman to the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I think I can make a motion to which everybody will agree. There is no disposition whatever to ask or obtain a hasty judgment upon this matter. This is simply the petition of a citizen of the United States who claims to speak in behalf of 10,000 of our citizens who have settled on a portion of our public domain, and who desire that Congress shall pass such laws as shall give them a government. That is all there is in this proposition; and in order that members may have opportunity to study this question and learn all the facts, I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Territories, when appointed, on which motion I move the previous question.

Mr. COX. I move that the petition and accompanying resolution be laid on the table.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. COX, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 157, noes 53.

So the petition and resolution were laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to be referred to the Committee on Rules, when appointed:

Resolved, That Rule XV of the Forty-ninth Congress be amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Members who voluntarily appear shall, unless the House shall otherwise direct, be immediately admitted to the Hall of the House, and their names reported to the Clerk."

REPRESENTATIVE-ELECT SWORN IN.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that a member-elect from the State of New York who has not yet taken the oath of office is present. If so, he will please come forward to be qualified.

Mr. PETER P. MAHONEY, Representative-elect from the Fourth district of New York, presented himself, and was duly qualified by taking the prescribed oath.

CENTENNIAL OF THE CONSTITUTION, ETC.

Mr. HOOKER submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to be referred to the Committee on Rules, when appointed:

Resolved, That a committee of seven members of the House be appointed, to be known as the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America, to consider the expediency of celebrating, in 1889, the one hundredth anniversary of the inauguration of the Constitution of the United States, and in 1892 the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus.

HARBOR OF ST. JOSEPH, MICH.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk. It is simply a resolution of inquiry.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause an examination to be made of that part of the harbor of St. Joseph, Mich., known as the canal or water channel leading to Benton Harbor, with a view of ascertaining what further improvement of the same is necessary to meet the demands of commerce, and that he furnish to this House, as early as possible, an estimate of the cost of the same.

Mr. RANDALL. The clause in regard to an estimate had better be omitted.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object to the adoption of this resolution without reference to a committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the resolution is before the House for consideration, in the absence of any rule at this time providing otherwise, and that the only way to dispose of the resolution is to act on it or refer it.

Mr. BURROWS. It is simply a resolution of inquiry, and seeks merely to obtain a report in relation to work which has been done during the recess.

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] make?

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, when appointed.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] had yielded the floor.

Mr. BURROWS. I had not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed, after which the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to state that this is nothing but a resolution of inquiry, and I do not care to debate it. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Pending that the gentleman from Georgia proposes to refer. The gentleman from Michigan demands the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope it will be voted down.

The question was put to the House, and the Chair declared the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BURROWS. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 105, noes 103.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The practice of the House heretofore decided by the Chair will prevail in ordinary legislative proceedings, and the gentleman's motion to refer to the committee is in order, notwithstanding the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. BLOUNT. I make that motion, then.

Mr. RANDALL. The vote taken was on ordering the main question simply. The question now is on the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to refer to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, when appointed.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

Mr. LANHAM introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules, when appointed:

Resolved, That Rules X and XI be so amended as to provide for the appointment of a standing committee on Indian depredation claims, to consist of thirteen members; and that all proposed legislation relating to claims of citizens of the United States on account of property destroyed or stolen by Indians, including appropriations therefor, shall be referred to the committee on Indian depredation claims.

COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. HOGG submitted the following; which was referred to the Committee on Rules, when appointed:

Resolved, That Rule X be, and the same is hereby, amended, so that line 20, on page 241, of the Constitution, Manual, and Digest, will read as follows: "On Printing, to consist of five members."

EPIDEMIC DISEASES, ADMISSIONS TO THE FLOOR, AND SHIP-BUILDING AND SHIP-OWNING.

Mr. PHELAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules, when appointed:

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, First, that Rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives be amended by inserting, after the words "on Enrolled Bills, to consist of seven members," the words "on Epidemic Diseases, to consist of nine members; on Admission to the Floor, to consist of five members; on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests, to consist of thirteen members."

Second, that Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives be amended by inserting, after section 48, the following sections: "49. All matters relating to quarantine and epidemic diseases, to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases. 50. Touching the use of the floor and halls of the House of Representatives, to the Committee on Admission to the Floor. 51. All matters affecting the merchant marine and the ship-building interests of the country, to the Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests."

Third, that section 49 of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives be changed to section 52, and that section 50 be changed to 53.

TIME ALLOWED FOR DEBATE.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, submitted the following amendment to the rules; which was referred to the Committee on Rules, when appointed:

No member shall have the privilege of disposing of the time allowed for debate, but when he has ceased speaking the Speaker shall designate the member entitled to the floor.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND APPROPRIATIONS THEREFOR.

Mr. DIBBLE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules, when appointed:

Resolved, That among the rules of the House it shall be provided in the rule relating to the "powers and duties of committees," that there shall be referred all proposed legislation relating to the public buildings and occupied or improved grounds of the United States, including appropriations therefor, to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

DISTRIBUTION OF INDEX OF PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. WHEELER introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, when appointed:

Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the Public Printer on the first day of each month, or so soon thereafter as practicable, to furnish the President of the United States, the heads of the several Departments, and each Senator and Representative, with a consolidated alphabetical index of the proceedings of this Congress for all preceding months as shown by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. LAWLER submitted the following resolution; which he moved be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means when appointed, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, requested to inform the House of Representatives whether the amount realized from the internal-revenue tax of 2 cents per pound on oleomargarine is needed for the present or future revenues of the Government, and whether the abrogation of this tax would beneficially diminish the Treasury surplus; also, whether it appears affirmatively from official information that the imposition of the oleomargarine tax operates to prevent the consumer from using a food product deleterious to public health, and whether the dairy interests of the country are protected by such tax mutually with the people, to the end that the supply of good and healthy butter is increasing in quantity and diminished in price; also, whether the tax on oleomargarine is not a duty levied upon a home food product, commonly known as butter, whereby the consumer is made to pay the additional duty of the internal tax so levied; this in contravention of the views of the President as expressed in his recent annual message, wherein he states as follows:

"This reference to the operation of our tariff laws is not made by way of instruction, but in order that we may be constantly reminded of the manner in which they impose a burden upon those who consume domestic products as well as those who consume imported articles, and thus create a tax upon all our people."

"Nor can the worker in manufactures fail to understand that while a high tariff is claimed to be necessary to allow the payment of remunerative wages, it certainly results in a very large increase in the price of nearly all sorts of manufactures, which, in almost countless forms, he needs for the use of himself and his family. He receives at the desk of his employer his wages, and perhaps before he reaches his home is obliged, in a purchase for family use of an article which embraces his own labor, to return in the payment of the increase in price which the tariff permits, the hard-earned compensation of many days of toil."

Mr. MILLS. I object.

Mr. LAWLER. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, I only propose the reference of the resolution to the committee when appointed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means when appointed.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MILLS. I want to appeal to this House not to commence the introduction of bills and joint resolutions at this time. If it is begun it will take two days at least, and we all appreciate the fact that our time is more precious just now in enabling the Speaker to organize the committees of the House. We ought to dispose of that question before beginning to introduce bills.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Let me introduce a joint resolution for reference.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. As I understand it, these are only for reference to the committees when they are appointed.

Mr. MILLS. I know that; but we are not ready yet to receive bills and resolutions for reference. They will only be piled up on the Clerk's desk, and lead to a great deal of confusion, which had better be avoided.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I rose to make a motion in reference to the resolution just read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand that the gentleman rose for that purpose, but thought when he addressed the Chair it was for the purpose of objecting to discussion. The Chair will of course hear the gentleman's motion.

Mr. PARKER. I wish to move, inasmuch as this resolution involves a question about which we have heard a great deal before, that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture, when appointed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is in time to make that motion, having risen for that purpose before the question was taken.

Mr. MILLS. I think it ought not to be referred to that committee. If referred at all it should go to the Committee on Ways and Means. [Cries of "Question!"]

The SPEAKER. This motion is not debatable.

Mr. MILLS. Then I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. RANDALL. Let it go on the table for the present.

The question being taken, the resolution was laid on the table.

CATTLE AND DAIRY FARMING.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 1) to provide for printing Executive Document No. 51, first session Forty-ninth Congress; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO THE RULES.

Mr. TARSNEY. I wish to submit a resolution for amending the rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend Rule II by adding the following:

"Clause 2. The Chief Clerk and Journal Clerk shall also, after the organization of the House, be elected by a viva voce vote; and the manner of the execution of their duties shall be vested in the Clerk and Speaker, respectively."

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules.

COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS.

Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore—

Mr. CARLISLE (the Speaker). Mr. Speaker, it is well known that there is a contest pending which makes it improper for me, as presiding officer of the House, to appoint, in the usual manner, the Committee on Elections. I have left the chair, therefore, for the purpose of asking the House to excuse me from the performance of that duty, and to take such proceedings in reference to the matter as its judgment may dictate.

I have no suggestion whatever to make except to say that the formation of the other committees of the House will be facilitated by having this subject disposed of at the earliest date that will suit the convenience of the members.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I submit for immediate consideration by the House the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That at 1 o'clock p. m. to-morrow the House will proceed to elect, by resolution or otherwise, fifteen members, who shall constitute the Committee on Elections for the present Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. A single word in reference to this resolution. I think it can be assumed as a fact to be taken for granted by members on both sides of the House, that in the proportions which have been common heretofore of the two parties represented on the committees of the House, the respective sides of the House will designate the gentlemen who will compose the committee under the resolution just read. The early hour of 1 o'clock to-morrow is mentioned, inasmuch as it is quite manifest that the business of the House and the action of the Speaker in forming the other committees will be facilitated by the formation of this committee at the earliest convenient hour.

Unless some gentleman desires to be heard, I shall ask the previous question.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I would like to inquire whether he proposes to take the sense of the House at this time on the resolution he has just offered?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the proposition.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I ask the gentleman, then, not to demand the previous question until a substitute can be offered.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well. I will withdraw the demand for that purpose, if a substitute is prepared, or is in process of preparation.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. The Clerk can take the substitute down as I shall presently state it. The question comes up somewhat by surprise to me, and I have not prepared the form of resolution I think should be adopted.

I accord my full admiration to the course the Speaker of the House has just pursued; but I can not, for one, acquiesce in the idea that he should abdicate the usual functions of the Speaker in selecting the Committee on Elections. I believe that the Speaker of the House is better informed about its membership than any one else, and is, therefore, the proper person to be responsible for the character of its committees. I am, myself, therefore, in the face of his declination, opposed to any such abdication of his power, and protest against it.

I believe the embarrassment which he has suggested arises in his mind because of a single contest which involves his own title to a seat on this floor; and I think, as every one will think, that it is right and proper that he should be disembarrassed of any responsibility for the appointment of a tribunal which is first to consider the question of his own election. But that, I think, is far enough for the Speaker and for the House to go, though he has generously proposed to turn over the entire matter to the House.

I propose, as a substitute for the resolution of the gentleman from Indiana, that the House shall confer the responsibility again on the Speaker for the appointment of the Committee on Elections which has to try all the other contests pending before the House, and that as to the trial and determination of his own contest and making the report in his own case there shall be a special committee of fifteen, to be selected by the House, which will relieve him of the responsibility of appointing a committee that shall determine his own case. I ask the Clerk to take down what I shall dictate as a substitute:

Resolved, That there shall be selected by the House of Representatives a select committee of fifteen members, to whom shall be referred the election contest of Thoebe vs. Carlisle.

The other part of the resolution suits me—that this shall be done to-morrow at 1 o'clock.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not accept the substitute offered by the gentleman from Georgia for the original resolution. I think that the Speaker of the House is correct in insisting that his case shall stand upon the same footing as all the other contests before the House and shall be considered by the same committee. I think that the action of the Speaker is eminently proper. I think he has pursued the course which both sides of the House expected from him. He has asked the House to name this committee, and I do not think he would consent, if the subject was submitted to him, that a different tribunal should be organized to decide in the first instance the case in which his seat in the House is involved from that which shall decide in the first instance all the other cases of contest that are pending before the House.

Unless some gentleman desires to be heard, I propose now to call the previous question on the two propositions.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MILLS. When the question was first presented to me this morning by my friend from Indiana, I suggested to him precisely the motion which has been made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER]. I thought that was the proper solution of the question. But on conferring with the Speaker I found he preferred the course indicated by the gentleman from Indiana. It is a question of delicacy; and I appeal to my friends on this side of the House to let the Speaker determine for himself this question, which affects him personally more than others, and to support, therefore, the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). The question is first on the substitute for the resolution of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER]. The resolution and substitute will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That at 1 o'clock p. m. to-morrow the House will proceed to elect, by resolution or otherwise, fifteen members, who shall constitute the Committee on Elections for the present Congress.

The substitute proposed by Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be selected by the House of Representatives a select committee of fifteen members, to whom shall be referred the election contest of Thoebe vs. Carlisle.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. It has been suggested that the same time be inserted in the substitute for the selection of this committee as is stated in the original resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That modification will be made. The question is now on the adoption of the substitute.

Mr. OATES. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana if the method of election which his resolution contemplates is similar to that adopted by the Senate in selecting its committees.

Mr. HOLMAN. It would be in effect the same. It is taken for granted that each side of the House will select the members it desires to serve on the committee.

Mr. COX. I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that he should also state there will be a caucus of the Democratic party this evening at half past 7 o'clock for that purpose.

The question being taken on agreeing to the substitute, the Speaker pro tempore stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 183.

So the substitute was not agreed to.

The resolution offered by Mr. HOLMAN was unanimously agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. As the resolution just adopted makes it necessary for us to hold a session to-morrow, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 13, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. PUGH. I desire to make a correction in the Journal. I see that I am reported as having moved to the Committee on Claims the reference of a joint resolution that I introduced in relation to the claim of John B. Read against the United States, for the alleged use of projectiles for rifled ordnance, claimed as the invention of said Read, and by him alleged to have been used pursuant to a contract or arrangement made between him and the War Department in 1856, for which no compensation has been made; also, in relation to the claim of William E. Woodbridge, based upon the plea of alleged priority in this line of invention. I disclaim having made any such motion. The remarks made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in favor of its reference to the Committee on Patents I did not hear. There was so much confusion in the Chamber that what he said was not understood by me.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] stated that the joint resolution, or one like it, had been before the Committee on Patents, and he moved that this joint resolution be referred to the committee that originally had charge of it and originally reported on it. That is a mistake. The first report made on the bill was by the Military Committee, through its then chairman, Mr. Howe, and it was a favorable report. The joint resolution, in as many as three Congresses, has been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and considered and reported upon favorably by that committee.

The language of the joint resolution was corrected by Senator Logan while he was chairman of the Military Committee, and it was framed so as to enlarge the range of the investigation by the board of Army officers that the measure authorized the Secretary of War to appoint.

The joint resolution simply authorizes the Secretary of War to appoint a board of Army officers from the ordnance and artillery service to investigate all the facts in regard to this claim and report them to Congress. There is no recognition of any claim in the joint resolution, and there is no appropriation asked. It simply authorizes an investigation by the Army officers of all the facts, to be reported to Congress, and then Congress will consider whether it is proper to make any appropriation to meet the claim.

I desire to move a change of the reference from the Committee on Patents to the Committee on Military Affairs, which has made, I think, as many as three favorable reports upon the subject. The present chairman of the Military Committee, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], is familiar with this measure; several members who were on that committee heretofore and are on the committee now are familiar with it; and I think it would be a reflection upon that committee to deprive it of jurisdiction now and refer the measure to a new committee.

I hope that the change of reference will be made from the Committee on Patents to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will take this occasion to say that the question now pending is whether the Journal shall stand approved. The Senator from Alabama complains of a debate that appears in the RECORD. The Chair does not understand him to make any suggestion about the amendment of the Journal.

Mr. PUGH. The amendment I desire to make is a correction of the statement that I moved that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims. I made no such motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No such motion appears on the Journal.

Mr. PUGH. The remarks that I made show on their face that the committee that I desired to consider the claim was the Committee on Military Affairs, as I stated that that committee always had had charge of it and had made several reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, and no motion to correct, the Journal will stand approved as read.

Mr. PUGH. I have moved a correction of the Journal in that respect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will read the Journal as it stands with regard to the joint resolution to which the Senator from Alabama alludes.

Mr. PUGH. What I thought was in the Journal I find in the RECORD. I thought it was copied from the Journal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama make any motion in regard to the Journal?

Mr. PUGH. I do not make any motion if the statement is not made in the Journal that I moved the reference of the bill to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will read the entry which appears in the Journal.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

By Mr. PUGH: A joint resolution (S. R. 5) in relation to the claim of John B. Read against the United States for the alleged use of projectiles for rifled ordnance claimed as the invention of said Read, and by him alleged to have been used pursuant to a contract or arrangement made between him and the War Department in 1856, for which no compensation has been made; also in relation to the claim of William E. Woodbridge based upon the plea of alleged priority in this line of invention—to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. PUGH. As there is no statement in the Journal that I made a motion to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on Claims, there is nothing left for me to do but to move that the reference be changed from the Committee on Patents to the Committee on Military Affairs, if that motion is now in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Journal, as read, will stand approved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. HOAR. I rise merely to make a suggestion, so that the matter may not take the time of the Senate again. I suppose there will be no objection to changing the reference by unanimous consent now, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would hold that by unanimous consent the reference may be so changed, the Committee on Patents discharged, and the joint resolution referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioner of Agriculture, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 7th instant, certain information in regard to a patent for the process connected with experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum, conducted under the auspices of the Government; which, on motion of Mr. PLUMB, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I present the petition of A. H. Hamilton and 172 others, citizens of Iowa, praying for an amendment of the internal-revenue law so as to prohibit persons who may pay special taxes to the United States as manufacturers or wholesale or retail dealers of spirituous, malt, or vinous liquors from conducting such business in any State, or municipal corporation, or other place, in violation of the laws or regulations of the same, or either of them, and to require all persons who may apply for the payment of the special taxes aforesaid to present with such application the certificate of the proper State or local authority, showing that the person so applying has complied with the State or local laws in respect to such manufacture and sale of said liquors, and providing proper penalties for any and all violation of such laws as may be enacted to effect the purpose of the petition.

As the petition relates to an amendment of the revenue laws, I move that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL presented the petition of Thomas Redmond, late a teamster in the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of George A. Barnes, late surety on the bond of Joseph Cushman, receiver of public moneys at Olympia, Wash., praying for a refund of money wrongfully covered into the Treasury of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MITCHELL. I present certain papers, memorials, resolutions, etc., urging the passage of a bill introduced yesterday by my colleague [Mr. DOLPH], being the bill (S. 39) to grant an increase of pension to Frederick Beno. I desire to call the attention of the Committee on Pensions especially to this case. The affidavit of the physician, which is very brief, states the case, and is as follows:

STATE OF OREGON,
County of Multnomah, ss:

On this 11th day of November, 1887, personally appeared before me W. W. Royal, a practicing physician, residing in East Portland, county and State aforesaid, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says: That he has this day carefully examined Frederick Beno, an applicant for increase of pension, and found him a complete and total wreck, both physically and mentally; that he is unable to stand on his feet, can not dress or undress himself, and is almost helpless.

W. W. ROYAL, M. D.

Subscribed and sworn to the day and year first above written.

W. F. CREITZ,
Notary Public in and for the State of Oregon.

This soldier is drawing a pension now of $72 a month, which is all the Department can allow. I visited him while home. From his manner it is apparent that he is suffering continuous excruciating pain. I suppose there is not a more meritorious case in the United States of America. A bill for his relief passed the Senate at the last session. I urge the Committee on Pensions to make an early and favorable report. I move that the papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM. If it is the purpose of the Senator to put the bill on its passage, and it is a bill to increase the pensions of those who are entirely dependent, requiring another person to attend upon them, there ought to be a general bill embracing all that class of persons, a part of whom are now getting $72 a month and the other portion $50. They are all equally dependent, and there ought to be a general bill passed giving to that class of persons $72 a month.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The Chair will inform the Senator from Illinois that this is merely a memorial, the reference of which is asked to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM. I thought it was a bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I agree to all that the Senator from Illinois has said. My only purpose was to bring the attention of the Committee on Pensions to this very meritorious case, and to express the hope that there would be an early report upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The papers will be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the petition of General Lewis Gove Brown, late of the One hundred and seventeenth United States Volunteer Infantry, praying to be allowed a pension at the rate of $100 a month; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of the Massachusetts Branch of the Church Temperance Society, praying for the passage of a law to authorize the Bureau of Statistics to investigate and report the facts concerning the cost of intemperance to the whole country and the relation of intemperance to crime; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER presented a petition of citizens of Virginia, praying for the passage of the so-called Colquitt bill to regulate liquor licenses in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, to report it favorably without amendment.

I will say that this is the bill unanimously reported by the Committee on Finance which last year passed on a yea-and-nay vote with only one in the negative. I shall call it up at an early day; and if Senators desire further information on the subject they will find it in Executive Document No. 158 of the Forty-ninth Congress, first session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

PRINTING FOR FINANCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report a resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance have authority to order necessary printing in connection with their examination of subjects relating to the revenue or the collection thereof.

Mr. BERRY. I will state that the bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary at the last Congress, and reported favorably by the Committee on the Judiciary, and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] reported it from that committee. This is a copy of the bill that was then referred to, and reported by, that committee. It properly belongs to the Committee on the Judiciary. It is a bill to punish horse-stealing and robbery in the Indian Territory, and I think the reference I have suggested is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts make any motion?

Mr. DAWES. It seems to me that the bill ought to go to the Committee on Indian Affairs, but if the Committee on the Judiciary have taken charge of it heretofore, through the remissness of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I do not care to intervene.

Mr. WALTHALL. The bill just read, in relation to Ship Island, was before the Senate at the last session, and referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, after some little discussion, and I would prefer that reference now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the title of the bill be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. 642) to authorize the removal of the quarantine station from Ship Island, Mississippi."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Library.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That reference will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the fact that a similar bill for the distribution of public documents was referred to the Committee on the Library at the last session—I do not mean similar in language to this bill, but it related to the general subject—and the Library Committee took jurisdiction of it under the order of the Senate and made a report. When the report came in, it was claimed by the Committee on Printing that that subject properly belonged to them, and the Senate seemed to think so. At any rate, the bill was referred again to the Committee on Printing. I do not think the Library Committee would care to go through that experience again. If the Senate desire the Library Committee to take jurisdiction of that subject, I have no doubt they will do it, but I should be very unwilling to go through the labor that we did last year to devise a system and then have the Senate refer it to another committee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am not disposed to ask that the bill shall go to a committee whose unwillingness to consider it is announced on the floor of the Senate. I therefore have no objection to a change of reference from the Committee on the Library to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Iowa misunderstood me. I did not express any unwillingness to take it, but I said that the Senate last year thought it belonged to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I understood the Senator to say that he would not care about going through the same experience, as he might meet with the same result.

Mr. MANDERSON. So far as the Committee on Printing is concerned, it is not seeking for labor; it has sufficient. But this subject-matter has been under consideration by that committee even during the recess of Congress, and they have progressed fairly with the investigation and towards a report on the subject-matter.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have no objection to that reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HOAR introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 13) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I think it proper to say that this is a joint resolution which was introduced by yourself [Mr. INGALLS] at the last session, and which, with some amendments, passed the Senate in a new draught at that session without any objection, I think.

It provides for the extension of the term of the present Congress until the last Tuesday in April, 1889, a little more than a month beyond the present termination. I think it is quite doubtful whether it will be possible, as it is now drawn, to submit such a resolution to the various States and have the action of the State Legislatures upon it in time to take effect. It is probable that the committee, if they should approve the object, will be obliged to make it take effect at a later day.

I have not made any correction in the draught of the resolution, thinking it would be better to submit that matter to the committee, to get the information in regard to the time of assembling of the State Legislatures, but I make this statement in order that the public may understand that the objection to the resolution as it now stands did not escape my notice.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

GOVERNMENT POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

Mr. SAWYER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate yesterday adopted a resolution, on motion of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], to raise a special committee to inquire into the advisability and practicability of establishing and maintaining a Government postal telegraph. After the reconsideration I shall ask to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. That committee has had the subject under consideration during the last two Congresses, has spent a great deal of time in considering it, and reported a bill in the Forty-eighth Congress, and also one in the Forty-ninth Congress, and I think the subject ought to be referred to the committee that has given so much time to it and acted upon it. I move, therefore, that the vote by which the resolution was passed be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution adopted by the Senate yesterday will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, be directed to inquire into the advisability and practicability of establishing and maintaining a Government postal telegraph, with power to report by bill or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the vote by which the Senate agreed to this resolution yesterday be now reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It lies over under the rule.

SENATOR FROM WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Committee on Privileges and Elections, while considering the pending cases now referred to them in reference to titles to seats in the Senate, have authority to employ a stenographer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Committee on Privileges and Elections be empowered to employ a stenographer.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: I understand that under the rules the motion which I just now made, for leave to the Committee on Privileges and Elections to employ a stenographer, should be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate before being finally adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent the action of the Senate will then be reconsidered, and the resolution referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

OPEN EXECUTIVE SESSIONS.

Mr. PLATT. Pursuant to the notice which I gave yesterday, I offer a resolution, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved, That paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 of Rule XXXVI, paragraph 3 of Rule XXXVII, and paragraph 2 of Rule XXXVIII be so amended that hereafter the Senate shall consider and act upon treaties and executive nominations in open session, except in cases when it shall be otherwise ordered.

BUSINESS OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, at the close of the last Congress the Senate ordered the appointment of a select committee to inquire into the methods of business in the various Executive Departments and the alleged causes of delay in its transaction. That committee has been performing the duties assigned it, and not being able to submit the report at this time, in behalf of the committee I ask that it may be continued with leave to report at any time prior to the 25th of December.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE SWENSON PATENT.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be requested to investigate the issuance of letters patent, numbered 371523, to Magnus Swenson, of date October 11, 1887, and if in his judgment the same is invalid upon any ground, that he commence suit promptly to have the same canceled, or the use of the same by said Swenson, or any one claiming under him, perpetually enjoined.

Mr. PLUMB. I propose simply to offer the resolution at this time. I shall call it up to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution lies over under the rule.

FORT CANBY RESERVATION.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed, if not incompatible with the public service, to report to the Senate at his earliest practicable convenience what action, if any, has been taken by the Department relative to the removal of troops from and the abandonment of Fort Canby, at the mouth of Columbia River, in Washington Territory, and that such report be accompanied with copies of any and all reports and recommendations of military officers and others, if any, recommending such removal and abandonment.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed, if not incompatible with the public service, to report to the Senate the size, character, and condition of the present military reservation near the mouth of the Columbia River, in Washington Territory, on which is located Fort Canby, and when and in what manner such military reservation was created, the nature, extent, and value of the present improvements on such reservation; such report to be accompanied by such recommendation as the Secretary of War may deem proper in reference to the future occupation or disposition of such reservation.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. MITCHELL, it was Ordered, That John C. Miles have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in his case.

On motion of Mr. GORMAN, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Frank Della Terre and Susan F. Della Terre, heirs of Peter Della Terre, deceased, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims, there being no adverse report.

COAST DEFENSES.

Mr. DOLPH. Yesterday I introduced a bill to provide for fortifications and other defenses, and asked that it be laid upon the table in order that I might call it up after the expiration of the morning hour and make a brief explanation of it. The business of the morning hour was so great yesterday that I did not call up the bill then, and I ask now to call it up for the purpose of making a brief explanation and having it referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. 62) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses."

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that the bill may be considered read as part of my remarks, and appear in the RECORD in full, as it is an important measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that, under the general order to print, the bill has been forwarded to the Government Printing Office, and is not now accessible in the files.

Mr. DOLPH. I will make the explanation, then, without the presence of the bill.

Mr. President, it is not my purpose to do more than explain the provisions of the bill which I have presented. Every one knows that our more than 4,000 miles of seacoast, with important harbors and great commercial cities, are defenseless, and that thousands of millions of destructible property and our important and extensive coastwise commerce are exposed to destruction in case of a foreign war. This condition of things is not creditable to Congress, nor to a great, wealthy, and powerful nation with 60,000,000 of inhabitants. I do not think there are many members of the Senate, or of the other House of Congress, who would be willing to say that this defenseless condition of our coast and of our commerce ought to continue.

We are prepared to enter upon the work of coast defenses. We have before us the results of the costly experiments of other nations, and the reports of boards which have been appointed under the authority of law, and have investigated the subjects connected with coast defense, and have reported, and their reports have been approved by the officers of the Government whose duty it is to make recommendations to Congress for its action.

We have within our own borders an abundance of material for guns, armor, and ships of modern type. Our citizens are not lacking in skill or enterprise or in information; the officers of our Army and Navy will compare favorably with the officers of the armies and navies of other countries.

What more is required? Action by Congress. The people of this country are patiently waiting for Congress to apply some of the idle millions in the Treasury to provide for coast defenses. The board on fortifications and other defenses, appointed by the President under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1885, have recommended the immediate fortification of twenty-seven ports. There are other ports at which fortifications are needed, but I presume no one will dispute that the fortification of the twenty-seven ports named is not only necessary but is urgent.

Our experience in the matter of works for the improvement of rivers and harbors has demonstrated that it is impossible to carry on economically and successfully great public works by appropriations which are made from year to year. The changes in the political character of one or both branches of Congress, the differences of opinion upon these subjects, and above all the apparent political necessity for cutting down expenditures, render such appropriations uncertain and always unsatisfactory. I think every one will agree that if we are to enter upon this work at all it would be the part of wisdom to appropriate in one bill the amount necessary for the fortifications undertaken, providing for its expenditure from year to year, as has been recommended by the board on fortifications and other defenses.

The bill offered by me proceeds upon this principle. It is proposed to appropriate the sum of $126,000,000, in round numbers, to be available as recommended by the board, $21,500,000 the first year and $9,000,000 annually for eleven years thereafter until the whole amount is expended.

Mr. PLATT. Why so little in the subsequent years?

Mr. DOLPH. Because that is the recommendation of the board, I suppose for the reason that during the first year it will be necessary to provide plants for furnishing the material for guns and for armor, and ship-yards and gun-factories, and other things which when once provided will be sufficient for the entire work.

It is proposed that this money shall be expended under the direction of the President of the United States, but under the supervision of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy and by the advice of boards, advisory boards, one to be appointed from the officers of the Army and one to be appointed from the officers of the Navy, and to be removable by the President at pleasure.

It is also provided in the bill that the work shall be, so far as possible, done by contract; in the construction of the floating batteries and torpedo-boats the provisions of laws governing the construction of additional vessels for the Navy are adopted.

The contracts for the fortifications and the other works which are to be carried on under the supervision of the Secretary of War are to be let under the provisions of the laws and regulations in existence at the time for the government of the War Department.

I do not, as I said, propose at this time to discuss the measure. I simply desired to make a word of explanation. I do not claim for the bill that it is the best one which can be made on the subject, but the proposition to appropriate the entire amount required in one bill, and make the appropriation available annually from year to year until the work is completed, I commend to the attention of Congress. If we pass the bill, we settle the question of fortifications at once, satisfy the country, and the work will proceed on the general plan recommended by the board on fortifications and other defenses until Congress shall change the plan. I am satisfied that this is the only course by which we can secure a speedy construction of necessary works for the fortification of our seacoast upon any general and suitable plan.

I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Secretary will report the first bill or resolution on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 14, 1887, at 12 o'clock m.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 14, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CULLOM presented the petition of Joseph W. Parish, praying to be allowed interest from January 1, 1864, on all sums due him for certain supplies furnished the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EVARTS presented the petition of the National Temperance Society, officially signed, praying that, by international treaty or otherwise, some provision be made to prevent the traffic in intoxicating liquors with the native races of the western Pacific islands; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of George W. Peavey, of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GRAY presented the petition of Edward Bradley, of Georgetown, Del., praying to be allowed bounty alleged to be due him for his services in the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

SENATOR FROM WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of Mr. Charles J. Faulkner, claiming a seat in the Senate from the State of West Virginia, and the remonstrance of Mr. Daniel B. Lucas against the admission of Mr. Faulkner, and the credentials of the appointment of Mr. Lucas, also claiming a seat in the Senate from that State, to report two resolutions and to submit a written report.

The report of the committee is unanimous. The questions which are raised in the case are very simple ones and easily comprehended. One of them has been long ago determined by the Senate, and I suppose all Senators have had occasion to reflect upon the other. It seems to me, in order that the Senator entitled to the seat may enter upon his duties at once, that there will be no objection to having the report disposed of at the present time.

I ask that the report be read; it is very brief, and if after reading it any Senator desires that it should go over, so that he may see it in print, that can then be done. Otherwise I shall ask that the resolutions be acted upon at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submits a report, which will be read if there be no objection. The Chair hears none. The report of the committee will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of Charles J. Faulkner, who claims a seat in the Senate from the State of West Virginia, and the protest of Daniel B. Lucas against the allowance of said claim, and the credentials of Daniel B. Lucas, who also claims the same seat, have considered the same, and respectfully report:

The Constitution of the United States, Article I, section 3, provides:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six years;" * * * "if vacancies happen, by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies."

"SEC. 4. The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators."

The Revised Statutes of the United States, Title II, section 14, provide:

"The Legislature of each State which is chosen next preceding the expiration of the time for which any Senator was elected to represent such State in Congress shall, on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization thereof, proceed to elect a Senator in Congress."

Section 15 prescribes the manner of such election. Section 16 is as follows:

"Whenever, on the meeting of the Legislature of any State, a vacancy exists in the representation of such State in the Senate, the Legislature shall proceed, on the second Tuesday after meeting and organization, to elect a person to fill such vacancy in the manner prescribed in the preceding section for the election of a Senator for a full term."

The Constitution further provides (Article I, section 5)—

"Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its own members."

Of course the opinion of any other tribunal can have no weight as an authority in determining any question as to the validity of the election of a Senator. But it may be proper to note that the constitutional authority of Congress to prescribe the time and manner of electing Senators, although it may not exhaust the whole subject, but still leaves in force the regulations of a State in regard to the same subject not in conflict with its own, is expressly affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States in ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S., 371.

The constitution of West Virginia provides that—

"The Legislature shall assemble at the seat of government, biennially, and not oftener, unless convened by the governor. The first session of the Legislature, after the adoption of the constitution, shall commence on the third Tuesday of November, 1872; and the regular biennial session of the Legislature shall commence on the second Wednesday of January, 1875, and every two years thereafter on the same day."—Article 6, section 8.

Article 7, section 7, is as follows:

"The governor may, on extraordinary occasions, convene, at his own instance, the Legislature; but when so convened it shall enter upon no business except that stated in the proclamation by which it was called together."

The term of Mr. Camden as a Senator from West Virginia expired on the 4th day of March, 1887. The regular biennial session of the Legislature began on the second Wednesday of January in pursuance of the provision of the constitution cited.

At that session the Legislature proceeded to ballot for a successor to Mr. Camden, but no person obtained a majority of the ballots, and it adjourned without making a choice. Thereafter, on the 5th day of March, the governor appointed Mr. Lucas in the recess of the Legislature and issued to him a certificate declaring his appointment as Senator in the Senate of the United States "until the next meeting of the Legislature, having authority to fill such vacancy." Mr. Lucas accepted the appointment.

On the same 5th day of March the governor issued the following proclamation:

"PROCLAMATION.

"STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
"Charleston, March 5, 1887.

"I, E. W. Wilson, governor of the State of West Virginia, under and by virtue of section 7 of article 7 of the constitution of said State, which provides that—

"'The governor may, on extraordinary occasions, convene, at his own instance, the Legislature; but when so convened it shall enter upon no business except that stated in the proclamation by which it was called together'—

"Do issue this my proclamation to convene the Legislature of said State, at the seat of government, at Charleston, on the third Wednesday in April, A. D. 1887, to consider and act upon the following subjects of legislative business, to wit:

"1. To make appropriations of public money to pay general charges upon the treasury.

"2. To make appropriations of public money to pay members of the Legislature, and for salaries of the officers of the government, in pursuance of the forty-second section of the sixth article of the constitution.

"3. To protect the public treasury against unnecessary expenditures by—

"(1) Regulating the costs, charges, and proceedings in criminal cases before justices of the peace and circuit courts.

"(2) Providing for and limiting the allowances for the maintenance of lunatics in jail.

"4. To carry into effect section 9 of article 11 of the constitution, which provides that—

"'Railroads heretofore constructed, or that may hereafter be constructed, in this State, are hereby declared public highways, and shall be free to all persons for the transportation of their persons and property thereon, under such regulations as shall be prescribed by law; and the Legislature shall, from time to time, pass laws, applicable to all railroad corporations in the State, establishing reasonable maximum rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freights, and providing for the correction of abuses, the prevention of unjust discriminations between through and local or way freights and passenger tariffs, and for the protection of the just rights of the public, and shall enforce such laws by adequate penalties.'

"And to provide for securing such relief to the people of this State as may be had from the act recently passed by Congress entitled 'An act to regulate commerce.'

"5. To prohibit railroad companies from carrying or conveying public officers over their roads free of charge, or at a less charge than the usual rate for other persons, and to abolish, absolutely, the free-pass system.

"6. To prohibit railroad companies from carrying or conveying delegates to political conventions over their roads free of charge, or at a less charge than is made for all other such delegates to such conventions, and to define what shall constitute a political convention.

"7. To prohibit the use of money and all other improper, fraudulent, and corrupt means to secure nominations, by political parties, or election to public office.

"8. To provide for the acceptance and confirmation of the reports of the joint boundary commission on the boundary lines between West Virginia and Pennsylvania."

The Legislature met in special session pursuant to said call, and duly elected Mr. Faulkner to fill the existing vacancy in the Senate of the United States, if it had authority so to do.

The Constitution of the United States is the supreme authority, and all provisions of the constitution or statutes of any State are void and of no effect unless they can be so construed as not to conflict with its provisions.

The Constitution of the United States expressly provides that the vacancy which happens during the recess of the Legislature of any State shall be filled by the Legislature at its next meeting. The statute of the United States merely prescribes the time and manner in which, at such meeting, the constitutional mandate shall be obeyed. The only question, therefore, which can possibly arise is whether the body which sat in pursuance of the call of the governor was a legislature in the constitutional sense.

It is claimed by Mr. Lucas that as this body was not permitted to enter upon any legislative business, except such as related to the eight matters set forth in the call, it was not a legislature, but was a body deriving its power from the will of the executive, and so was exerting a certain executive or quasi-executive function, something like that which is exercised by the Senate in giving its assent to the nominations of public officers.

But it seems to us that this view can not be supported. In the first place, the body is expressly declared by the constitution of West Virginia itself to be a legislature. In the next place, the function which it exercises in making enactments upon the eight great subjects mentioned in the call of the governor is clearly a legislative function. Among them, under articles 1 and 2, is the making appropriations of public money; under article 3, the regulating of procedure in criminal cases; under articles 5, 6, and 7, would exist the power to declare certain high crimes and misdemeanors; and under article 8, to give the assent of the State to the establishment and confirmation of its boundary lines.

It is difficult to conceive of any definition of the word "legislature" which would not include a body capable of passing and actually passing such enactments as these. They can be binding on the people of the Commonwealth only as legislation. They would be subject to be construed and enforced by the courts of that State only in their character as laws.

But it seems to the committee that the construction of the State constitution of West Virginia, upon which the above argument is based, is one which will not bear examination. When that constitution provided that the Legislature so convened on extraordinary occasions "should enter upon no business except that stated in the proclamation by which it was called together," the people must be presumed to have had in mind business to be transacted under authority of the State constitution, and not to have intended to prohibit the performance of duties imposed upon it by the supreme authority of the Constitution of the United States.

If the argument be sound that a legislative body which is prohibited from entering upon certain classes of business, or which is confined to certain classes of business, clearly legislative in their character, is no legislature in the constitutional sense, its logic would require us to declare that the Legislature of every State whose bill of rights excludes it from large domains of legislation is no legislative body. If, under the same provision of the Constitution of the United States, the act of Congress had fixed a day for holding elections for Representatives to Congress, and the State constitution or laws should prohibit the assembling of the people for such elections on the day so fixed, it would, we suppose, be held clear that the act of the State would be void and the authority of the act of Congress would prevail.

We can not see any difference between such prohibition of a State constitution applicable to the constitutional electors of Senators, who are members of the State Legislature, and the constitutional electors of Representatives, who are a body of electors authorized to vote for members of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

We are therefore clearly of opinion that the election of Mr. Faulkner at the special session of the Legislature of West Virginia was valid.

It is insisted that Mr. Faulkner was ineligible to the office of Senator by reason of the provision of the constitution of West Virginia:

"No judge during his term of office shall practice the profession of law or hold any other office, appointment, or public trust, under this or any other government, and the acceptance thereof shall vacate his judicial office. Nor shall he, during his continuance, be eligible to any political office."—Article 8, section 16.

But we are of opinion that no State can prescribe any qualification to the office of United States Senator in addition to those declared in the Constitution of the United States. See the debates on the case of Mr. Trumbull, Taft's Election Cases, page 148.

This provision, according to the settled rule of construction, must be so construed as to attribute to it a meaning not inconsistent with the constitution of West Virginia. This can well and properly be done by holding it to mean "eligible to office under the constitution of West Virginia."

We therefore find that Mr. Faulkner has been constitutionally elected to the seat in the Senate made vacant by the expiration of the term of Mr. Camden, and that he is entitled to take the oath.

We report the following resolutions:

Resolved, That Daniel B. Lucas is not entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of West Virginia.

Resolved, That Charles J. Faulkner has been duly elected Senator from the State of West Virginia for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1887, and that he is entitled to a seat in the Senate as such Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolutions reported by the committee? The Chair hears no objection, and the first resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Daniel B. Lucas is not entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of West Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on agreeing to the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The second resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Charles J. Faulkner has been duly elected Senator from the State of West Virginia for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1887, and that he is entitled to a seat in the Senate as such Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution? The Chair hears none. Is the Senate ready for the question upon agreeing to the resolution?

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the committee just what it intends by that resolution. Whether it intends to say that Mr. Faulkner was a Senator during the time which elapsed after the expiration of Mr. Camden's term and before the special session of the Legislature. Did his term commence on the 4th day of March, 1887, or did it commence at the time of his election?

Mr. HOAR. As I understand, it is the uniform rule of the Senate from the beginning as to a Senator—and, indeed, it is the rule in the other House as well, where, within a period since my public service here began, the elections in two or three States for the House of Representatives took place after the 4th of March—that the title to the seat, as far as it can have any retroactive effect, dates back to the beginning of the constitutional term, and the Senator holds his place and draws his salary from that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question upon agreeing to the resolution?

Mr. HOAR. If I may be pardoned, before the Chair puts the question, having had the suggestion made to me by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], I desire to state that that was the action of the Senate very recently in the case of General Logan.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator-elect is in the Chamber, he will please advance and receive the oath of office.

Mr. FAULKNER, escorted by Mr. KENNA, advanced to the desk of the President pro tempore, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to make a motion in connection with the same subject. I move that Mr. FAULKNER be added to the Committee on Claims, the Committee on the District of Columbia, the Committee on Mines and Mining, and the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Mr. FAULKNER be added to the Committees on Claims, on the District of Columbia, on Mines and Mining, and on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT. I may as well say a word upon this resolution as at any other time. I wish to state that I do not assent to what appears to be the doctrine of the resolution which has just been adopted giving Mr. FAULKNER his seat, namely, that his term commenced at the expiration of the term of the former Senator, Mr. Camden. I think it was a vacancy to which he was elected.

The report of the committee proceeds upon the theory that the Constitution of the United States made it the duty of the special session of the Legislature of West Virginia to fill a vacancy, when that vacancy, if it were the original vacancy, had already been filled, as I hold, by the appointment of a Senator by the governor. It seems to me that whatever the practice may have been, the law is so that the Senator is elected to fill the unexpired term.

I did not wish to make any objection to the passage of the resolution, but I desired while the matter was before the Senate to state my views upon the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question upon agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts?

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the following resolution, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, while considering pending cases in reference to seats in the Senate, be empowered to employ a stenographer.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. HARRIS. The Committee on Rules, which was directed some days since to inquire into the propriety of amending Rule XXXI of the Senate, direct me to report an amendment to that rule. I ask the Secretary to read Rule XXXI.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read Rule XXXI.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXXI.

Whenever a committee of the Senate, to whom any claim has been referred, reports adversely, and the report is agreed to, it shall not be in order to move to take the papers from the files for the purpose of referring them at a subsequent session, unless the claimant shall present a petition therefor, stating that new evidence has been discovered since the report, and setting forth the substance of such new evidence.

Mr. HARRIS. The committee directs me to report an amendment to the rule, which I ask may be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Add to the rule the following:

"But when there has been no adverse report, it shall be the duty of the Secretary to transmit all such papers to the committee in which such claims are pending."

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider at this time the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the proposed amendment to the rules reported by the Committee on Rules may now be considered. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection; but I suggest that after the word "report," the words "agreed to" be inserted, so as to read:

But when there has been no adverse report agreed to, it shall be the duty of the Secretary, etc.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that upon consideration he would not be willing himself to adopt the amendment he proposes, because when an adverse report has been made, and at the request of any Senator it goes upon the Calendar, that adverse report is rarely ever reached and rarely ever agreed to by the Senate. Where there has been an adverse report, the committee deemed it proper that the papers should not be again referred to a committee without application. I can not agree to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it is essential. It has been the universal rule of the Senate that unless the adverse report is agreed to, it is not conclusive, and does not prevent the case from being referred to a committee again. There are divers instances where adverse reports have been made, and at the very next Congress a favorable report been made, and the bill passed. It is not right to preclude the reference of papers where simply an adverse report has been made and no action has been had by the Senate upon that report.

Mr. HOAR. I sympathize with the desire of the Committee on Rules to accomplish this change, and am aware of the inconvenience caused the Senate by the present practice; but I desire to submit to the consideration of the Senator from Tennessee, whether the rule as now proposed to be adopted is not a very serious intrenchment upon the constitutional right of petition.

When the Senate has acted and rendered a judgment upon a petition or claim by accepting an adverse report, as the original rule contemplates, of course it can not be claimed, the Senate being the same body, that every citizen has a right to require us to inquire over and over again into his case. But where a majority only of a committee of the body have expressed an adverse opinion which leads to the adverse report, and the Senate has taken no action upon it, it does seem to me that it is limiting the constitutional right of petition to say that a citizen shall not have the right to bring that case to the attention of the Senate again. Of course, to deny him the right to present his case with its papers is a denial, substantially, of a right to a new petition. It is a denial of the right to have that petition considered upon its facts by the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to suggest to him at this point that the amendment proposed denies nothing to a petitioner or to any one else? It imposes a duty upon the Secretary of the Senate, under certain circumstances, to transmit certain papers on file in his office to a committee so as to save the Senator from Massachusetts and other Senators the trouble of asking the Senate for a special order of reference.

Mr. HOAR. Of course I listened to the proposed amendment only as it was once read. Does not the proposed change in the rule extend the prohibition of bringing forward papers from the case where there has been an adverse report accepted by the Senate to the case where there has been an adverse report not accepted?

Mr. HARRIS. The amendment simply makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Senate, where a Senator has introduced a bill for the relief of any claimant, without any special order of the Senate, to transmit all papers on file in his office relating to it to the committee where the claim is pending, and it leaves Rule XXXI precisely as it stood before, except the imposition of that duty upon the Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Add to the rule the following:

"But when there has been no adverse report, it shall be the duty of the Secretary to transmit all such papers to the committee in which such claims are pending."

Mr. HOAR. The Senator is entirely right. I see that the rule as proposed is not liable to my criticism.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the amendment to Rule XXXI proposed by the Committee on Rules?

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE introduced a bill (S. 787) to protect innocent purchasers of patented articles, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know from the title of the bill just what it refers to, but I assume that it refers to a subject which has been very many times before the Committee on Patents; and according to the rule which has been adopted here, that a bill should be referred to the committee which has once had consideration of the subject, I think it should go to the Committee on Patents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut make a motion for reference to the Committee on Patents?

Mr. PLATT. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. GEORGE. I prefer that it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary, for a specific reason.

Mr. PLATT. Let the bill be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill to protect innocent purchasers of patented articles, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be a valid defense to any action for an infringement of any patent, or any suit or proceeding to enjoin any person from the use of a patented article, that the defendant therein, or his assignor, purchased the patented article for use or consumption, and not for sale or exchange, in good faith and in the usual course of trade, without notice that the same was covered by a patent, or without notice that the seller had no right to sell such article; and in all such cases notice received after such purchase shall not have the effect to impair in any way the right of such purchaser as absolute owner.

SEC. 2. That all patents for any discovery or invention hereafter granted by the United States shall be subject to purchase by Congress, for the use of the people of the United States, at such reasonable valuation, and on such terms, and in such mode as may be provided for by law; and all such patents shall be considered and treated in law as issued subject to that condition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. GEORGE. The most important part of the bill relates to the application of the law in regard to innocent purchasers, and I thought that the proper committee to refer it to would be the Judiciary Committee. I prefer that course to having it referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. PLATT. I have no feeling about the matter; I am not chairman of the Committee on Patents now; but when the title of the bill was read it struck me that it was on the same subject which has been for many sessions before the Committee on Patents, and upon which the Committee on Patents has reported from time to time. The Judiciary Committee has a very wide range of matters before it, and it seems to me that this is a subject which should be entirely within the cognizance of the Committee on Patents. So I insist on my motion.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 19, noes 20.

Mr. PLATT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. Before the yeas and nays are taken I believe I shall make an explanation.

This is a very important bill, one in which the people of this country are very much interested. The law as it now stands operates in many cases a very great hardship upon the persons who go into open market and buy in good faith a patented article, thereby subjecting themselves without any notice on their part to suits for large damages. As the Senator from Connecticut has stated to the Senate, that question has been before the Committee on Patents on two or three occasions, I believe, and that committee has not seen proper to grant relief—the relief which I and which a good many members of this body think the people of the United States are entitled to—and as the bill refers to the application of an important principle of law, having reference to the rights of innocent purchasers without notice, a purely judicial proceeding, as my friend from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] suggests, I thought it was proper under all these circumstances that it should go to a new committee.

Mr. PLATT. I do not suppose the Senate paid very much attention to this matter when the bill was read before, and I ask that it be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Now, Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, is it the pleasure of the Senate to proceed further with morning business?

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the Senate proceed with the morning business until it is concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

Mr. PLATT. I will say a word in reply to the suggestions of the Senator from Mississippi.

What I contend for is the proper disposition of matters brought before the Senate. This is a matter which, if any measure comes within the jurisdiction and cognizance of the Patent Committee, comes naturally before that committee. If the desire and disposition of the Senate is to take away from the consideration of the Patent Committee a bill upon the ground that the Patent Committee will not deal with it as the member who introduces it thinks it ought to be dealt with, then we may as well have that principle established generally, and it will reach a great many cases.

As it seems to me, the Patent Committee has been in no way open to the charge of dereliction in dealing with this subject. The bill has never been before that committee, I think, but what it has received consideration and report. I do not mean this particular bill, but I mean bills embracing the same subject; and those bills so reported, if my memory serves me, have in more than one instance received the approval of the Senate. Now, why a bill bringing the same subject again before the consideration of the Senate should be taken from the committee which has heretofore had the consideration of it, as it was supposed properly, and be given to another committee, I can not see, unless it be for the reason given by the Senator from Mississippi, that the Patent Committee have not reported upon the bill as he thinks they ought to have reported. If that principle is to be adopted in regard to the reference of measures before the Senate, as I said before, it will upset a good deal of the procedure of the Senate, and will reach a great deal further than is thought at the present time.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut misapprehends me when he states that the sole reason I had for changing the reference of the bill from the Committee on Patents to the Judiciary Committee was that the Committee on Patents had not considered the bill in the light in which I thought it ought to have done.

I regard the bill as being of a kind which may properly be referred either to the Judiciary Committee or to the Committee on Patents. It proposes a change of the general law upon a very important point. It proposes the application and extension of a very important principle of law, applicable to nearly all departments of business, to the business of patents, and I thought for that reason it might properly go before the committee which had charge of the general jurisprudence of this country.

The first section of the bill has sole reference to the extension of a most salutary principle of the common law, recognized in a vast majority of the transactions of human life, to a peculiar class of cases, and I thought for that reason it was very appropriate to refer it to that committee which has jurisdiction over the general jurisprudence of the country. But I must confess that as an additional and subsidiary reason, believing, as I have stated, that the reference to the Judiciary Committee was appropriate, it was proper to consider that the Committee on Patents on this very important question had come to a conclusion which I thought was very adverse to the rights of the great mass of the American people. As far as I can learn, there has been more wrong and injury done under the patent laws by suits against men who go into open market, into the stores and warehouses of the country, and buy in good faith articles which they suppose the seller has a right to sell, and then are afterwards brought up before a court, fifty or one hundred or two hundred miles from their homes, to account for it; and as the Patent Committee had not seen proper to extend to such cases this very salutary principle of the common law, the protection of innocent purchasers, I thought it was proper and right that another committee should consider that question also; and for that reason, and in addition to the reason which I gave first, that the Judiciary Committee was a very appropriate tribunal to determine it, I insist, in behalf of the rights of many persons in this country who have been injured by the present law, that this bill shall go to the other committee.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the Senator seems to admit that his real reason for sending this bill to the Judiciary Committee is that the Patent Committee did not report such a bill as he thought they ought to have reported. It is not claimed that the committee did not report a bill of this general character. Having reported such a bill, it was for the Senate to say, by amendment or otherwise, whether it was in accordance with the judgment of the Senate. In this case there is an amendment proposed to the patent laws. Would the Senator, or would anybody, say, if it was an attempt to revise the patent laws, that the Judiciary Committee was the appropriate committee to receive the bill? And because it is a partial revision or because it presents a question of law, as every bill must, is there any greater reason for referring it to that committee?

If we propose to proceed in the Senate in an orderly manner by sending bills to appropriate committees, organized for the purpose of dealing with some particular class of cases, we shall send bills to the committees which are organized to consider the subjects to which they relate; but if, on the other hand, it is proposed, every time a Senator thinks he can get a bill out of one committee more favorable to his views than out of some other committee, to refer it to the committee which he thinks will favor it, then there will be no system of order in the Senate, and we shall spend our time, as we have done frequently, in controversies as to what committee shall receive this bill, that, or the other.

The uniform practice of the Senate has been for many years to parcel the business out to committees, and then send all bills pertaining to a particular subject to the committee appointed to take charge of such measures; and the Senator from Mississippi has given no reason why that rule should be changed or departed from.

Mr. CHACE. I was not present when this question was first raised, but I confess that it strikes me that the Senate is rapidly drifting into a state of disorganization in so far as the question of the reference of subjects to the different committees is concerned. This is the second time so early in the session that an attempt has been made to set aside the good order of the Senate in that regard.

I apprehend if there is any propriety in the organization of our committees, and the selection of the membership of the committees with reference to their fitness for the duties pertaining thereto, that it is no argument that the question has in a former Congress been referred to the Committee on Patents, and that they have seen fit, in their wisdom, to report a bill not comporting with the ideas of the Senator from Mississippi. By parity of reasoning you might take any question with regard to the land laws and refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary, and so in regard to the Post-Office. In short, why should not the Judiciary Committee, being in particular a committee appointed to consider legal questions, engross all the business of the Senate? It seems to me that the force of the argument of the Senator from Mississippi is instantly dissipated upon a review of it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I was a member of the Committee on Patents for a good many years, and while I was upon that committee this question came up before it, and, although there were some members of the committee who had special interests as representing constituencies where there were many inventors, they took pains to ascertain the sense of Senators who represented constituencies who had made complaint of some of the impositions which had been practiced upon the agricultural communities of the West by the vendors of patents, and in every instance they agreed upon a measure, and reported one to the Senate, which was satisfactory to such Senators as the late Senator from Minnesota, Mr. Windom, who, everybody knows, was the champion of the attack on the existing patent system, and other gentlemen from all sections of the country, and I think in one or two instances those bills received the assent of the Senate. In others they did not get taken up.

It seems to me it would be a violation of all the proprieties of the Senate, after appointing a committee on the subject of patents, to refer a proposed general law providing for dealing with patents to another committee. The establishment of such a precedent would be more injurious to the dignity and authority of the Judiciary Committee in the end than to any other committee in the body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, it seems to me clear from the nature of this bill, which involves really the whole consideration of patents, although it is about suits for their infringement, that it fairly belongs to the Committee on Patents. If they ought not to consider this subject of the relation of a patentee to his customers—for that is what it comes to—or to the people who are using his invention, or who he claims are using it, I really do not know what the Committee on Patents can have to do, because they do not grant patents. They sometimes, as an act of special grace, recommend that patents be extended; but, in the main, the important part of the business of the Patent Committee, that sees all sides of this question, is to consider the relations between the patentee and persons who are alleged to be using his invention.

So it seems to me that my friend from Mississippi had better let the matter go to the committee which, to my mind, is obviously the appropriate committee.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire only to make one more remark in relation to this matter, and that is that my information is that very great wrong has grown up under the law as it exists. I have been endeavoring to get this matter considered for several sessions of the Senate, and the wrong still continues. I admit that the Committee on Patents might appropriately have jurisdiction of this matter, and I also admit and contend that the Committee on the Judiciary have jurisdiction. There are many cases where it is a matter of indifference to what particular committee a bill shall be referred.

This bill, as I before remarked, endeavors to extend a most salutary principle of the common law to a class of cases to which it has not heretofore been extended. It is the extension of this salutary principle which I insist is necessary and proper and an essential defense to a large number of the people of the United States, who innocently go into stores, into warehouses, and pay their money in good faith for an article which they suppose the seller has a right to sell, and the next day, or the next week, or the next month, they find themselves visited by a United States marshal with a writ or a summons to a court at a distant point, where, even if they are successful, the cost of the suit on their part will be larger than the value of the article which they purchased.

I believe, from the former history of this question before the Senate, that no relief can be had to these people unless the direction which I ask this bill to take shall be taken, and I hope, therefore, that it will be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I entirely sympathize with the object of the bill introduced by the Senator from Mississippi; I entirely agree with him that the abuse at which it is directed, and which it is intended to remedy, has become intolerable; but upon the question of the appropriateness of the reference in this body to the Committee on the Judiciary, I entirely differ with him. If I understand at all the functions of the Judiciary Committee—and I am free to say that I do not know that I do understand them fully, for it is a very august committee—that committee has jurisdiction of all subjects which require inquiry into the state of the law, and it is their duty to inform this body, after they have investigated a juridical subject, as to what the law is, in their opinion.

Now, sir, it seems to me that if this bill can appropriately be referred to the Judiciary Committee, by reason of the very superficial relations it has to a question of law, then almost any bill that is here introduced might be so referred.

The doctrine of innocent purchaser as applied by our courts and the presence or absence of notice is not an abstruse doctrine about which the Senate wants information; it is a doctrine well settled in the jurisprudence of the country; but in regard to its application by statute law to this subject-matter of patents, it is merely a question of policy, which the Committee on Patents, it seems to me, is specially fitted to consider, because it concerns the whole scope of the patent law; and it can not be satisfactorily considered by a committee that is not charged with the duty of considering the patent law in all its bearings as well as with reference to the particular matter referred to by the Senator from Mississippi. Nor do I think that it is any function of the Committee on the Judiciary to have or to exercise a supervisory power over the other committees of the Senate, and when, in the opinion of a member of that committee, other committees who appropriately have in their jurisdiction subjects-matter for consideration fail to do what that member considers its full duty, that it should be taken from the committee having it in charge and referred to the Judiciary Committee. I do not know what action was had by the Committee on Patents on this subject.

As I said before, I entirely sympathize with the object the Senator from Mississippi has in view; but I do consider that orderly proceeding in this body and avoidance of confusion in our business demand that this bill shall be referred to the Committee on Patents, to which it properly belongs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] to refer the bill to the Committee on Patents, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GIBSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FRYE (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired on all political questions with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. I did not understand this to be a political question, and therefore I voted.

Mr. BECK. I have voted, though paired with the Senator's colleague [Mr. HALE].

Mr. FRYE. Is this a political question? ["No!" "No!"] If the Senator from Kentucky desires to vote——

Mr. BECK. I have voted. That is the reason I suggested my pair with the Senator's colleague.

Mr. FRYE. I do not regard this as a political question, and therefore will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CULLOM. I announce the pair of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. I do not know how either Senator would vote on this motion if present.

Mr. GIBSON. If this is not regarded as a political question, I will cast my vote in the negative.

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 25; as follows:

REFUND OF DIRECT TAX.

Mr. BERRY. I ask leave to submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, which was reported yesterday from the Finance Committee by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], and is now on the Calendar. I ask that the amendment lie on the table, and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received, lie on the table, and be printed, if no objection be interposed.

INDIAN TRADERSHIPS.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Indian Traders be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to continue the investigation directed to be made under Senate resolution of June 3, 1886, with all the authority and powers granted to the original committee by said resolution of June 3, 1886, including the taking of testimony and the employment of a stenographer.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

Mr. HARRIS. The case not falling within the amended rule, I ask for the following order:

Ordered, That the petition and papers of John T. Robeson, late United States consul at Beirut, for refund of money paid by him for clerk-hire, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, there having been no adverse report thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the order will be agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, submitted the following order:

Ordered, That the papers in the case of L. W. Huston be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, there having been no adverse report thereon.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. This order does not come within the provisions of the amended rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be considered as agreed to, if no objection be interposed.

THE SWENSON PATENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], which comes over under the rules.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be requested to investigate the issuance of letters patent, numbered 371528, to Magnus Swenson, of date October 11, 1887, and if in his judgment the same is invalid upon any ground, that he commence suit promptly to have the same canceled, or the use of the same by said Swenson or any one claiming under him perpetually enjoined.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] desires to address the Senate, and I will not ask the Senate to take up that resolution now, but let it lie over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over until to-morrow.

FOREIGN IMMIGRATION.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask to have the bill in relation to foreign immigration, introduced by me, laid before the Senate, and the title of it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. 141) to regulate immigration, and for other purposes."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, the simple change in the laws regulating immigration, as proposed in the bill introduced by me, is to have the examinations in regard to the character of foreign immigrants first made by the consuls of the United States at the place of their departure, at their own homes, where they are known, instead of being made, as they are now, at our ports by State commissioners, who must be wholly destitute of power to ascertain any antecedent facts in relation to the personal history of any one of a ship-load of immigrants. Those who honestly pass this consular examination will receive a consular certificate, for which a fee of 50 cents is to be paid, instead of the same amount, as a duty, heretofore collected from the vessels in which the immigrants have been brought. This will be more convenient for all parties concerned, and also likely to deter from making any attempt at evasion those whom we seek to exclude. The cost of transportation to immigrants who comply with the law will not be increased, and any doubt about their reception upon their arrival here will be greatly diminished, if not wholly removed. All other changes proposed are intended to regulate but not to prohibit or embargo immigration, and are only the logical requirements made necessary to carry the change referred to into practical effect.

There has been a sentimental idea abroad that we have offered a political refuge to the persecuted and oppressed of every clime, regardless of their moral character; but the American idea really never offered a refuge to convicts or to irreconcilable enemies to law and order, nor to the occupants of the Old World's insane asylums and poor-houses. Our laws only left the doors open to persons of "good moral character." There is no lack of constitutional power to interpose whatever barriers we choose in order either to regulate or even to interdict immigration. Section IX of the Constitution reads as follows:

The migration or importation of such persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by Congress prior to the year one thousand eight hundred and eight.

It follows that after the date mentioned the power of Congress became unlimited, and we may at least turn the turbid stream through a consular filter to intercept and exclude very unwholesome if not dangerous foreign interlopers, and relieve our people from the compulsory support of those whom every State would exclude but for the lack of constitutional power.

The fact that over 5,000,000 of immigrants, by no means of uniform quality, came into our country within the last dozen years, or more than one-tenth part of the population by our latest census, shows that the question is of grave magnitude and worthy of the attention of Congress. It should, however, be understood that the great American principle of the free admission of immigrants is not to be abandoned; but that principle has always borne upon its face the condition that the immigrants must be of good moral character and able to support themselves. Otherwise they have had no title to our recognition as immigrants. We have never pretended to offer support to universal pauperdom, or an asylum to all afflicted with incurable defects, nor to offer our freedom to the promiscuous outcasts and criminals of all foreign nations. None of these have ever been invited, and they are to be excluded because they have no proper claim upon us of comity, affection, or charity, and because they bring general discredit upon the reputation of all immigrants as much as upon our own native citizens.

The time has arrived, as it seems to me, when it is more necessary to look after what the future character of the American people shall be than to the growth and vastness of its numbers, or to its territorial grandeur. Our forefathers, only three million strong—less than the present number in several States—and with less than a fourth part of our present territory, won a creditable name among nations by martial achievements, by elevated statesmanship, and by stern devotion to moral and religious principles, which a later generation can ill afford to lose, though it may leap ahead on "a canter" beyond even a growth of sixty millions. It is not enough that our country is numerically strong, and has abounding wealth. It is not enough that its industrial activities are conspicuous, nor that its brawn and bravery are undisputed even by its foes. Other great and historic nations also have waxed and waned. For many centuries more than half of mankind has remained irrevocably moored to Gothic barbarism, and European races only have made any noteworthy progress. A great nation can only maintain its claims as such by the greatness of its people, by brain power and intellectual development, and by work that confers honor upon our common humanity.

The paramount question must be asked whether or not there is visible cause for alarm, lest among the miscellaneous multitude of foreign immigrants annually landed on our shores, trained to widely different institutions, with a Babel confusion of tongues, including paupers, lunatics, idiots, and criminals, there may not be introduced many vicious and inconvertible elements, more dangerous to the individuality and deep-seated stamina of the American people and more worthy of rigid quarantine than even the most leprous diseases. I refer to those whose inherent deficiencies and iniquities are thoroughbred, and who are as incapable of evolution, whether in this generation or the next, as is the leopard to change his spots.

The greater portion of foreign additions to our population appears to find its most congenial home in our largest towns and cities. Many of this class may be young, moral, and industrious—diamonds in the rough—destined to become valuable by the friction of American training and education; and many, drawn from the dregs of foreign society, perhaps have only just outrun the constable, and prefer debauchery to sobriety, idleness to labor, and crime to poverty. Meantime the general administration of our municipal governments, with some scandals of corruption and some examples of prodigal indebtedness recklessly imposed upon future generations, if not dark clouds upon popular institutions, are certainly not calculated to make us vain of this part of our home-rule. The splendor of cities, unfortunately, seems seldom without a wretched back-ground of squalor. Municipal governments have to be constructed, of course, from such materials as the locality offers. Like the church in Pownal, as stated by General Nye, if it was divinely intended to have a church there, then Providence must accept of such members as Pownal had to offer.

Political parties too often strive to have a working majority in the control of cities, and, rather than to fail of this, some have been willing to accept of infragrant and unhealthy auxiliaries only because every head is counted, careless whether to adorn or besmirch the American character. Thus the mayor of the "Athens of America" was recently led to preside at a reception in honor of the champion slugger of the prize-ring. If not the will of the mayor, certainly his political necessities consented, and the "ring" may be expected not to forget the mayor at the polls.

Many of our citizens of foreign birth are notable men, eminent in all the higher walks of life, and being mostly of the same stock of the original Anglo-Saxon race, have become thoroughly Americanized, but more than a moiety of immigrants are contented with the most inferior and wretched abodes found in cities, and will not accept of health and prosperous homes elsewhere. Seventy per cent. of the population of Boston, it has been computed, are foreign by birth or parentage, 80 per cent. of New York, and 91 per cent. of Chicago. This extraordinary percentage, it is more than probable, may be aggravated by future immigration.

It must be remembered that all portions of cities which are in the poorest sanitary condition are usually the most crowded and the most prolific. Here the constant infusion in such large measure of the lower type, physical and moral, of divers foreign peoples, often ill-fed and illiterate, can not fail to degrade to some extent city-bred population, and, should any great war occur, the inferior physique of the recruits rejected would be displayed in excessive proportions. Without any interference with the majority of immigrants, whose good character is undisputed, we may at least check the re-enforcement of that beggar-my-neighbor class in all cities which is of evil repute and the most expensive to support.

The Celtic, Anglo-Saxon, Scandinavian, and German immigrants, coming here in remarkable force, have been easily digested and assimilated, and with advantage to the energy and elasticity of the American race, but hitherto they have made greater changes in their own character than in that of the New World. Doubtless every ship-load of immigrants received, while never failing to add to our bulk, has a tendency to elevate or to sink the national character. When they come with health and vigor, both moral and physical, willing and prepared to support themselves and the institutions of a free government, they strengthen and enrich the national character. But even a few dead flies in the ointment, according to Scripture, give it the stinking savor, and involuntary immigrants, and such as leave their native land as paupers, criminals, lunatics, or idiots, whether many or few in number, poison and impoverish the life-blood of our people, and none of these classes ought here to find an asylum, or to find even the luxury of American jails and prisons. All such as these must be tabooed and excluded in order to rescue the reputation of the major and better class of immigrants, as well as to protect our own good name and the general welfare.

It is to be feared that the influx of these discredited classes is now too great for the absorbing power and reformatory forces with which they are here brought in contact; and whether this influx drops to the bottom or rises to the top, it largely settles or floats together in many of our cities as a threatening and incongruous mass. The title of an American citizen is far too precious to allow of its seizure by all newcomers without any inquiry as to their antecedents or previous history—an inquiry that might leave them without title as citizens "in good and regular standing" anywhere. In foreign lands the annual supply of these unwelcome burdens seems to be inexhaustible, and it is not wonderful that state or local facilities are there often tendered for their riddance and removal to our country; but whatever resisting power we possess should be promptly brought into action, so far at least as to winnow and exclude the chaff from the wheat, so far as to prevent the ingress of the pariahs among mankind, or of those who, if not wearing the mark of Cain, have been rejected and spewed out from their native lands, and are therefore unworthy of American citizenship, or to commingle and compound their blood with that of the American people.

The independence of the United States was only just pronounced when all Europe seemed ready to accept the theory of Count de Buffon and the Abbé Raynal that on the American continent there was a tendency of nature to belittle her productions, or a physical degeneration of all animal life, including that of the human race, which was assumed to be inferior, smaller, and weaker than that on the European continent. This groundless calumny was rebuked by Hamilton, and was also thoroughly refuted, cut up, root and branch, by the philosophic pen of Mr. Jefferson in his famous "Notes on Virginia," although it may be still an article of faith not wholly obsolete among American dudes and foreign cockneys. Hamilton referred to the arrogant pretensions of the Europeans in the following words:

> It belongs to us to vindicate the honor of the human race and to teach that assuming brother moderation. Union will enable us to do it. Disunion will add another victim to its triumphs. Let Americans disdain to be the instruments of European greatness.

The adherents of the old régime in Europe regard our prosperity as their reproach, if not an outrage, and would not now very painfully regret evidences of physical or intellectual inferiority and decadence among the American people. Such a decline and fall there is to-day scarcely an empire or monarchy whose rulers, quivering as they look at their own political and sanitary condition, would not promptly aid by prepaid transportation to our shores of all their idlers and deadweights, whether felons or lunatics, whether paupers or rickety idiots, as their free contribution to the solution of the great problem of man's self-government. Their own colonies, after a prolonged surfeit of such gifts, no longer accept the equality and fraternity of penal and pauper immigrants, and we should not hesitate to profit by their example.

By the Tenth Census, of 1880, it appears that our total foreign-born population, including their children, was 14,995,996, or 5,000,000 more than the total population of Great Britain when she waged war against our Declaration of Independence. The number of immigrants received since the last census has been 4,344,500, which, without including children born since 1880, makes a total foreign population of 19,340,496, or nearly one-third of our present population. This discloses the enormous attractive force our country exerts upon the inhabitants of Europe, many of whom now only wait for money to pay their passage to America. Our republican institutions, higher wages, land homesteads, universal education, cheaper food, and more generous habits of living will long exercise a magnetic and potential influence over discontented foreigners. The expellent agencies abroad also are by no means slender, and easily aid in the contribution of an immigrant army of more than a half million for our annual invasion. Population there is increasing, but less rapidly than taxation, which in Great Britain from 1870 to 1880 increased 20 per cent., in France 36 per cent., in Norway 50 per cent., and in Germany 57 per cent. The long years of relentless servitude over all Europe of their young men in standing armies have no reduction or abridgment, and the multiform reasons for foreign expatriation do not appear to be diminishing. We can not afford to be wholly unmindful of the character of this annual invasion if the future character of Americans is worth preservation.

Our contention is peaceful, but with more powerful numbers than even those of the northern horde by whom the mighty fabric of the Roman Empire was overthrown.

Undoubtedly considerable capital has been brought into our country by foreign immigrants, but there is an annual drain also of large amounts sent back by those who are prosperous. From 1848 to 1885, as far as ascertained, $150,951,780 were remitted by settlers in the United States and British North America to their friends in Great Britain.

Let me now ask attention for a moment to the laws requiring amendment.

The "act to regulate immigration," approved August 2, 1882, superseding the former head-tax upon alien passengers by the State of New York, imposes a duty of 50 cents for each passenger not a citizen of the United States, by sail or steam vessel, from a foreign port to any port of the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury is charged with the execution of the act, and is authorized to enter into contracts with State commissioners or officers designated by the governor of any State to take charge of the local affairs of immigration, under regulations prescribed by the said Secretary, and these commissioners are authorized to go on board of any ship or vessel upon its arrival and make an examination; and if they find any convict, lunatic, idiot, or any person unable to take care of himself or herself without becoming a public charge, such persons shall not be permitted to land; and all convicts, except those convicted of political offenses, are to be sent back to the nations from whence they come, and the expense of the return is to be borne by the owners of the vessels in which they come.

The New York head-tax laws upon alien passengers, though rightly and vigorously intended, were found to be unconstitutional; and in the matter of determining who among all the immigrants shall be excluded and returned to the country from whence they come our present laws appear to be lame, possibly of no account whatever, as the decision of the question is left to the collector of the port upon the facts reported to him by the State commissioners; and our courts appear recently to have declared that his decision can not stand or be received on habeas corpus. This sufficiently indicates that our existing laws, which the courts say are inartificially drawn, must be amended. The United States authority manifestly should control the whole subject, as otherwise the several States will be without remedy against very formidable and unnatural burdens.

The law of 1882 applies only to immigrants arriving on sail or steam vessels, and therefore does not apply to or exclude any part of those who may arrive from contiguous foreign countries by land transportation. Yet a considerable part of the British-aided immigrants landed in the Dominion of Canada, fly away as quick as young partridges hatched in the nest of a disconsolate hen, and wake up the next morning in the United States. In 1881 there were 69,025, and 80,692 in 1882, and 72,274 in 1883, and 62,724 in 1884, or 284,713 foreign immigrants in four years who came through the Canadian Dominion. However difficult any remedial measures may be practically, yet some safeguards should be provided to prevent those who have been properly excluded from entrance at the front door from meeting with no restraint or impediment in being smuggled through unlimited back doors. A shorter voyage, cheaper fares, and British occasional aid of from two to three pounds sterling per head, is a very great temptation for immigrant passengers to accept of northern routes open for 4,000 miles into our country, and yet against this peculiar contraband there is not a sentinel or guard throughout our whole northern frontier.

Some of our railroad companies, eager for traffic or for the sale of lands, have employed agents to distribute glowing circulars to stir up and evoke immigration, setting forth the enravishing attractions of their lines of travel in many languages, perhaps more than simple truth would have warranted, and whenever their roads reach our boundaries, if they are to receive the profits of the immigrant business, they should not escape the same scrutiny to which sail and steam vessels arriving at our ports may be subjected.

On my way here I visited Castle Garden, at New York, where a vessel had just landed 600 immigrants from Antwerp. It was an instructive view to look over the crazy-quilt panorama presented, and very suggestive of doubt about our transcendent power to transform them all into good and valuable American citizens. For the most part they were undersized, and their countenances and general make-up betokened the work of nature's apprentices. They were doubtless not a fair sample of the common people of Europe. One Swiss girl, however, apparently thirteen or fourteen years old, with a young babe in her arms, possibly her mother's, blushing with the "cheek of innocence," as if ashamed of her company, would anywhere have been pronounced a model of youthful beauty. One noticeably weak old man, manifestly incapable of labor, was accompanied by two poorly-clad and ruddy-faced daughters. The latter might possibly be able to support themselves, but the old father obviously would not. They excited much sympathy as they were waiting to find out whether all were to be permitted to remain or all to be sent back, or to submit to a separation of the family. There must be many pitiful puzzles like this which reach the hearts of even immigrant commissioners, who doubtless do he best they can, but the numbers are too large and the day too short for any careful scrutiny, and the motley procession passes the review with machine-like rapidity.

Our existing laws against the cooly trade, as well as the laws by which Chinese laborers are excluded from entrance into our country, are doubtless sufficient; and heavy penalties by our laws are also imposed upon those who bring foreigners here under contract to perform labor. The violation of these laws is repugnant to the general sentiment of our people; and, therefore, they are supposed to be easily enforcible; but practically there are some difficulties in the way; and in Italy, if not elsewhere, the contract law is evaded by agents of their banking-houses, who advance the cost of transportation under a contract guarantying wages to the laborers for the next six months, from which the amount advanced is to be refunded. The foreign agents, not being amenable to our laws, such laborers as arrive under a foreign-made contract can not be ascertained if they make no disclosures themselves, and our consuls at the place nearest to their residence or place of departure should be authorized to unravel the facts. From clergymen and from civil magistrates trustworthy information can readily be obtained. This would undoubtedly, for the most part, prevent at the outset their embarkation. The contract law must, however, be amended so that contracting immigrants shall be as clearly subjected to some legal penalty, as well as their aiders and abettors. This is needful in order to justify our sending them back.

Our laws were intended to cover all cases where immigrants might be expected to become a charge upon the public for their support, but practically only the slightest hinderances have been presented against the incoming of paupers, convicts, idiots, and lunatics. The prima facie evidence offered here in these cases must always be lame and inconclusive, and that is the only evidence now tendered. The slight and hurried examination of ship-loads of steerage passengers, as they run the gauntlet at Castle Garden about as fast as their names can be recorded by the officers of the State commissioners, under the delegated authority of the United States, who must be without any love for the service, will always be superficial and to the last degree untrustworthy. The passenger may have been provided by his parish or by neighbors—aching to be rid of him, and regardless of any ship-going migratory cholera—with funds for temporary support, or with other nominal but worthless evidences of independence, but sufficient to pass the ordeal of the commissioners, and the fraud then may go undetected. The foreign state-aided or locally-assisted mendicant may have been elbowed out, or caressed with the gift of a passage-ticket all the way to Chicago or Omaha, and how is the fact to be discovered? "The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau."

The number of immigrants arriving at New York in 1883 was nearly 500,000, and of these only 1,330 were sent back to the places from whence they came, namely, 53 insane, 6 blind, 4 deaf and dumb, 16 idiots, 25 cripples, 649 incapacitated through illness, 55 incapacitated through old age, and 462 unable to maintain themselves.

A much larger number, beyond doubt, might have been returned for like reasons, but among them all it does not appear that any one was sent back for having been a convict. Convicts are bold, often enterprising, and the actual numbers arriving may have been only less than of chronic paupers. The number of immigrants admitted as paupers to Ward's Island in the course of ten years, or from 1877 to 1886, was 35,447, and the number admitted in nine months, or from January 1, 1887, to October 1, was 2,302. The figures given are of course limited to the port of New York. These are oppressive burdens, away from their proper place, which the ethics of modern civilization do not permit one nation to inflict upon any other nation, and it would be rank pusillanimity for us to tamely submit to the imposition.

The destination of some immigrants, with whose support we appear to be frequently charged, has often nominally been to other countries. A large number of patients, also, have been admitted into the immigrant hospital at Ward's Island, on account of disease when landed—in 1886 the number was 1,573. From some localities these patients so far exceed the ordinary proportion to the immigrants from the same country as to excite a suspicion that their relatives, if not willing to bury them alive, after the manner of some savages, were at least willing to trust their aged and diseased kith and kin to the rigors of an Atlantic voyage and to the constrained charity of a far distant people.

The telegraphic report of the proceedings of the British House of Commons, September 1, 1887, contained the following instructive item: Mr. Balfour, replying to Mr. Healy's question as to what steps had been taken in view of America's objection to receive pauper immigrants, said that "the Government would allow no more money for the transportation of such persons during the remainder of the year." This is a negative pregnant, showing what has been done. He does not say that any parish or any neighbors may not furnish money for such transportation, but only that the Government will not. Mr. Balfour is a leading member of the cabinet in the house, who, therefore, must have taken the usual ministerial oath that he "will advise the Queen according to the best of his cunning and discretion," and this minister graciously announces that for the remainder of the year the British Government will allow no more money to send their paupers to America. This discloses that what they have been doing is not just now "discreet;" and also what, at the end of the year, it may be "cunning" to do again, unless the fishery commissioners implore Mr. Balfour to refrain from strewing briars in their path while cunning diplomacy here is going on. The paupers of Great Britain number very nearly a round million outside of the "uncounted vagrants and casual poor," who far exceed in numbers her so-called paupers. Hence we find a reason for some lack of fastidiousness on her part about what appears to us as sinister-handed methods of diminishing their number.

All know how difficult it frequently is to determine the fact of insanity. On some subjects the party may appear entirely sane—have lucid intervals—while upon others actually insane. A lunatic, according to Blackstone, "is indeed properly one that hath lucid intervals, sometimes enjoying his senses and sometimes not, and that frequently depending upon the change of the moon." Though we may stick a little at his dependence upon the moon, Blackstone may be relied upon as to the "lucid intervals." Even the most skillful experts often greatly differ in their testimony concerning those charged with insanity. It has happened that a person conducting a lunatic to an asylum has had the tables cleverly turned upon him by the quick action of the wide-awake lunatic, and found himself, instead of the other fellow, thrust into the asylum.

Professor Seymour, of Harvard College, while visiting near Hartford, Conn., in August last, starting hurriedly bare-headed to meet a friend at the railroad station, was apprehended by an officer who mistook the bare-headed, fast-going professor for an escaped lunatic of the Hartford Asylum, and he was only released upon the guaranty of his identity and sanity by the friend he went to meet. The learned professor must more than ever have found consolation in the poetry of Dryden—

> Great wits are sure to madness near allied,
> And thin partitions do their bounds divide.

If errors thus occur as to the sane, equal or greater errors are not less likely to occur as to the insane. The abuse to be avoided in the case of lunatic immigrants may be of inferior magnitude, but even the existence of such an abuse, were it not of constant occurrence, would seem incredible, and the instrumentalities of avoidance have too often been found to be wholly inadequate.

It has been stated by the superintendent of the New York Insane Asylum that nearly 75 per cent. of the inmates are foreign born. In nine months of 1887 there were 117 of such immigrants admitted for support at the New York State Emigrant Asylum, and the whole number of immigrant lunatics so admitted in ten years, from 1877 to 1886, inclusive, was no less than fourteen hundred.

Often a peculiar congenital malformation, or shapeless head, discloses the fact of idiocy, and the idiots of the Alps, or cretins with goiter on the throat, may be easily recognized. Surely, however, there are some fools and half-witted noodles concerning whom no such proof may be visible. What shall be the test? It will not be known, if the old question is asked, whether they invented gunpowder or not, or that, like Squcers, they ever set their boys "to hoe turnips in midwinter," nor that they ever applied Macassar oil to restore bald spots on a hair-covered trunk, or that they ever "shod a goose." Some of the witless brood may possibly keep their mouths closed, guiltless of "a tale told signifying nothing," and they can not always be swiftly detected by the instinct of even the wisest State commissioners. Of the whole idiotic class, however, with their proverbial fecundity, we want none, and much less want their spawn. They should all be subject to the ban of our consuls. A fool is never without his appropriate and ascertainable reputation in his own country.

In the case of convicts our present law is even more faltering and uncertain. The party may be verily guilty, but, if unconvicted, it does not count, and the law does not apply. It can hardly be expected that men on the rogue's march, hunted out or in dread of being hunted out of their own country for crimes will come here, and, at the instant of landing, turn state's evidence and confess themselves convicts—an act which would be likely to send them directly back to the frigid justice of the land from which they had but just escaped. The culprit may have come under a false name, or with stolen funds, or come, so far as appearances go, as a well-to-do gentleman, and as

> The mildest-mannered man
> That ever scuttled ship or cut a throat, and a cabin-passage ticket is supposed to cover all his sins. The thief who has eaten a stolen horse, according to the proverb, does not put the tail in his mouth. Obviously the detection of convicts or criminals, from their physiognomy or their wardrobe by State commissioners, when altogether limited to such tests, must be perfunctory and unsatisfactory. But convicts are known at home, where the taint adheres forever.

From a report of the Howard Society of London, it appears that "74 per cent. of the Irish discharged convicts have found their way to the United States."

The English rulers are supposed to hate Irishmen, and whether this report can be fully accepted or not, it is unquestionably true that there are very few Irishmen so good and loyal, saying nothing about convicts, that Englishmen would not gladly speed them on their way to America. More of the English than of the Irish, however, appear to be traveling in the same direction.

Of 680 discharged convicts who applied to the Prison Association of New York for aid during the year ending June 30, 1883, it is stated that only 144 reported native parentage against 536 who reported foreign parentage. The strain upon cities is obviously upon our weakest point. Our late Mr. Sumner never said a wiser thing than this: "Nations have decayed, but it has never been with the imbecility of age."

Austria has long been in the practice of expelling her criminals, and not long since banished three of them to America. Their return will not be likely to be urged under any treaty. Even the authorities of Denmark, for whom our sympathy touching her territorial spoliation is not yet cold, have only just had a noted forger transported on his promise to "take up his abode in America," and Mr. Reimenschneider will come here not doubting that "the world is mine oyster."

I have a letter just received from a very distinguished gentleman, for some time an official resident abroad, containing the following statement:

> I had sad occasion to know how the privileges of American citizenship are abused; and this is even better known to foreigners than ourselves. Constantly in the light German drama, as exhibited on the stage, the scoundrel of the piece is represented as finishing his career in America, and there is too strong a tendency to regard our country as a cesspool for the vilest products of European life.

It may be that American rogues sometimes flee to foreign lands for their country's good, or to escape convict labor, and that in a court of equity foreign nations might have something against us by way of offset; but nevertheless, judging from the recent rather large increase of convicts in our own country, with some noticeable diminution abroad, and from the preponderance of foreign criminals in our courts and prisons, we must be by far the greater sufferers. The expense of the police in our cities from this source has been immensely increased. It is evident by their skill and deviltry here exhibited that too many immigrants have passed through the Old World high schools of crime and depravity, and, like Milton's Satan, they have heard of the New World and hoped there to "reign secure."

Our consul-general in Germany writes of "sons and other relatives of highly respectable families, who, in spite of all their talents and attainments, had to leave here. They were sent," he says, "by their families to America and other countries for the reason that their morals had become a scandal."

These families might give their prodigals a certificate of character, but it would have to be worded like that of the Irishman about his parish priest, who was often found tipsy: "Oh, he's a respectable man, barring his character!" Young men, from seventeen to twenty-six years of age, in Germany, liable to military service, who want to emigrate go to Antwerp or Rotterdam to embark, to escape from being seized and held back by German officers at Bremen, where they are often arrested. Of course they do not arrest paupers nor cripples.

Colonies no longer go forth in fraternal groups, cemented by a like faith, but each immigrant, so to say, goes on his own hook, or is sent away for reasons most appreciated at the place of departure. The unprofitable and the unwanted, equally with thrifty Israelites, are almost kicked out of all parts of Europe. Certainly it is quite in order for us to guard against this wholesale and flagrant imposition.

If our laws would fail to exclude the prohibited persons, it has been suggested to me that one of our rocky Aleutian islands would have surpassing merits as a penal colony, to which these offenders might be transported.

Under our existing laws no alien can be lawfully naturalized by our courts who is destitute of "good moral character." How are those who have become "a scandal" in a foreign land and a terror to their own families, to be discovered, unless the facts can be investigated and probed by our consuls where their character is notorious?

Aliens arriving in our country, if the substance of the bill proposed shall be accepted, to whom the required consular certificates as to character have been refused, must logically be refused American citizenship, and also refused permission to declare their intention to become citizens. If, from their own defects of character, or from incurable infirmity, they could not have been lawfully brought within the United States, it would be the acme of stupidity to bestow the highest privileges upon those who have jockeyed and evaded our laws by somehow and somewhere making a clandestine landing.

The "act to restrict the ownership of real estate," approved March 3, 1887, makes it unlawful for any person or persons, not citizens, or who have not lawfully declared their intention to become citizens, or for any corporation not created by the United States, or by some State or Territory, to acquire, hold, or own real estate in the United States.

It will be readily seen that the first part of this law is a flimsy restraint and of no account whatever. The declaration of intention to become a citizen, whether in good faith or not when made, at once invests an alien with all the privileges to acquire, hold, or to own real estate, and an alien may thus live and die the legal owner of real estate, or may become a real estate trafficker, and snap his fingers at the restriction, as there is no provision by which, if the declaration of intention should not be regularly followed by actual citizenship, the title shall be invalidated.

As to the pre-emption of the public lands, or the ownership of real estate, or the offer of free homesteads, it would seem eminently just and prudent to restrict these high privileges and bounties to our own household or to absolute citizenship. To throw them into the lap of all who merely declare an intention to become citizens would be subject to many future contingencies and evasions. If it were otherwise, the limited extent of desirable public lands no longer admits of further general and wholesale prodigality, nor justifies the temptation of aliens with gifts of our last acres; and we should also bear in mind that we now have every new year, of those born in our own country, nearly a million of young men who will reach their majority, to whom it will be far more for the public weal to offer free homesteads than to aliens or strangers. Provident husbandry demands that our posterity, young America, shall not be wholly deprived of its birthright.

The measure introduced by me was intended more effectually to regulate immigration by a scheme so moderate as to meet general acceptance. Of course it will be referred, together with all other bills on the same subject, to the Committee on the Judiciary, and be subjected to a learned and careful revision. If the committee shall find time to look at the defects of our present laws as well as to their defective administration, it will be the only assurance asked for that they will at an early day report some measure to checkmate the gross imposition of foreign nations to which, for some years, we have been so largely subjected.

Floods of immigrants, like breakers of the ocean, are daily thrown upon our shores, over five million, as I have already stated, within the last dozen years, and over forty thousand Italians within the last ten months; and the tidal wave which confounds the homogeneity of the people to-day is no sooner absorbed than another rushes and tumbles in to-morrow. We hold a tempting part of the world, and to those who come with clean records, seeking to escape from the iron heels of foreign aristocracies or from the strangulation of a superabundant population, we leave our doors wide open; but shall we not refuse hospitality to all classes of alien irreclaimable maniacs, mendicants, and miscreants? And may we not refuse to become a universal almsgiver on compulsion? Our countrymen must not be coerced to support the weak, vile, and hungry outcasts from hospitals, prisons, and poor-houses, landed here not only to stay themselves, but to transmit hereditary taints to the third and fourth generation.

Americans are to be known as Americans, hopeful of positive and ideal characteristics, physical and mental, not second-rate anywhere, but a coherent and famous brood of men. Holding the primacy on the North American continent, with a population likely to exceed that of all Europe before the end of the next century, the historic, active, and intellectual life of the people should correspond to the magnitude of the great field they now and will hereafter occupy.

The form of our republican government is peerless, and its citizens do not court the partnership of cripples, nor of those "to dishonor bred."

Comparatively young as nation-makers, but never found dull nor inapt in the science of government, we should be ambitious to reach and hold onto its highest perfection, keeping step to the march of modern civilization, with full faith in our everlastingness, and find true happiness in preserving our "people unspotted from the world," as well as in responding to every call of duty which maintains or advances Americans on the front line of human progress.

Mr. President, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The other bills on the same subject have been referred, and I thought rightly referred, to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and it would be a pity to split up this business between different committees. I hope my colleague will allow the bill to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MORRILL. The question of what particular committee shall consider the bill is immaterial to me, but I consulted with the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and he preferred that it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary, as it involves some other questions besides mere immigration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is true; but the questions of legal administration which it involves are merely incidental to the main question, which is purely a question of foreign relations.

Mr. MORRILL. I am not tenacious about a reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have a great many treaties with other countries which may be brought into very delicate relation with a sweeping requirement in regard to the investigation that is proposed.

Mr. MORRILL. As the other bills have been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, I make no objection to the reference suggested by my colleague.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it best that the bill should go there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 15, 1887, at 12 o'clock m.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 15, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in pursuance of the requirements of the eighth section of the act of July 22, 1854, supplemental reports from the surveyor-general of New Mexico on the following private lands in that Territory:

Las Truchas tract, No. 128;

The town of Abiquiu, No. 140;

The pueblos of Santo Domingo and San Felipe, No. 142; and

The Domingo Valdez, No. 141.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The letter of transmittal ought to be printed, but I see the papers are voluminous. The communication should be referred, without printing the accompanying documents, as it may be that the printing will be unnecessary. These are private land claims, apparently, and I move the reference without printing.

The motion was agreed to.

MARBLE BUST OF GIUSEPPE GARIBALDI.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication; which was read, and referred to the Committee on the Library:

To the President of the Senate of the United States:

SIR: The Italians, residents of the city of Washington and citizens of the United States, admirers of the great and noble actors in the problem of human happiness, and particularly of Giuseppe Garibaldi, the lover and defender of universal liberty, the fearless soldier, and the unblemished patriot, united in council, resolved to commemorate his great and noble deeds by adding his to the monuments of the many brave and unselfish patriots who in the cycle of American history so greatly contributed to the creation and preservation of this great Republic.

Therefore, the Italians of this capital, loyal American citizens, offer to the United States, through their representatives in Congress assembled, a marble bust of Giuseppe Garibaldi, a fine specimen of Italian art, and beg that it be accepted as a link in the chain of sympathy that all free men feel for the champions of liberty and popular government.

In behalf of the Society for a Monument to Garibaldi:

TULLIO DE SUZZARA-VERDI, President.

WASHINGTON, D. C., 815 FOURTEENTH STREET, NORTHWEST,
December 14, 1887.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McPHERSON presented the petition of John W. Cummins, of New Egypt, Ocean County, New Jersey, praying to be allowed an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of John McGrath, of New Egypt, Ocean County, New Jersey, praying to be allowed an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of James Murphy, late a private of Company K, Third Regiment United States Infantry, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR. I present the petition of John Arthur Lynch, a citizen of the United States, praying for the survey of a line for a railroad from the northwestern boundary of the United States through British Columbia to Alaska. The petition is indorsed "to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations." I am not quite sure what is the proper reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will order that reference if the Senator so desires.

Mr. HOAR. I believe a like petition was referred last year to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HARRIS presented a petition of the Memphis Cotton Exchange and a petition of the Memphis Merchants' Exchange, praying that an appropriation be made for the support of the Signal Service; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of 99 ex-soldiers and citizens of Centralia, Ill., praying that John Prendergast may be restored to the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PADDOCK presented the petition of the Seventh Semi-Annual Convention of Fruit Growers of the State of California, praying that a sufficient sum be appropriated to defray the expenses of a qualified entomologist to proceed at once to Australia, the country from which the scale insects have come, to investigate the subject with a view to the importation of the enemies of those insects; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, presented the petition of John J. Coughlin, of Washington, D. Mr. BLAIR presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, praying for the passage of the educational bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a petition which is addressed to me, but evidently intended for Congress, praying for an increase of the salaries of fourth-class postmasters. It seems to be a stereotyped petition of the printed sort. I do not know from what particular county in the State of Missouri it comes; it is not indicated in the petition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the petition will be received and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

IDA M. WELTON.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask, as the request is in the nature of a petition, that the petition and papers of Miss Ida M. Welton, praying to be allowed a pension, which were before the Senate at the last session, but not finally acted on, be referred to the Committee on Pensions. I am not sure but that this would come within the general order, but as there was no report at all, I am not certain that it would, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that the papers may be sent to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, subject to the rule.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (S. 28) to create a port of delivery at Port Angeles, in the district of Puget Sound, Washington Territory;

A bill (S. 25) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880; and

A bill (S. 24) to extend the limits of the port of Portland as a port of entry.

MRS. VIRGINIA POORE.

Mr. PADDOCK. By instruction of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution to pay the widow of the late Ben: Perley Poore the amount of six months' salary as clerk to the Committee on Printing, I report it back with a written report recommending the passage of the resolution. I ask that the rules may be suspended and the resolution immediately considered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, submitted the following report, to accompany resolution to pay the widow of the late Ben: Perley Poore six months' salary:

The committee reports the above resolution favorably, and with the recommendation that it do pass. The precedents for the action proposed are both numerous and long established, and cover a period of many years in both Houses of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will now be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Mrs. Virginia Poore, widow of Maj. Ben: Perley Poore, deceased, late clerk to the Senate Committee on Printing, an amount equal to six months' salary as clerk aforesaid; said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks that the resolution may be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAIR. I do not wish to object to the consideration of the resolution, but I should like to inquire what is the amount of salary which will be carried by it to the widow of Major Poore.

Mr. MANDERSON. It will be one-half of the annual compensation that Major Poore had as committee clerk.

Mr. BLAIR. How much is that?

Mr. MANDERSON. The annual compensation is $2,200 a year. It will be the sum of $1,100.

Mr. BLAIR. It will be recollected that quite a controversy occurred during the last session in regard to the amount to be paid in case of the death of employés of the Senate, and I was then informed that there was an iron rule adopted that in no case should a larger sum be paid than $1,000. That was the amount given in a case in which I was interested at the time.

I do not wish to make any objection to the resolution, but I call attention to this circumstance, that it may not be a precedent.

Mr. MANDERSON. I know of no such rule as that. I think it is six months' salary. The only rule or custom which has been adopted by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate has been that this amount should be paid in lieu of funeral and all other expenses. This resolution is carefully drawn in that form.

Mr. BLAIR. The matter was stated to me in this way on the floor of the Senate at that time. The resolution in that case had been referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses; they had acted, and their report was to the effect that they had adopted as an inflexible rule the sum of $1,000 in such cases. I do not wish to oppose the resolution. I merely call attention to the circumstance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on agreeing to the resolution?

The resolution was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 795) for the relief of the volunteers of the Fourth Regiment of Iowa Infantry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 796) for the relief of Bvt. Col. Thomas P. O'Reilly; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 797) referring the claim or claims of Eugene F. Arnold, administrator of William H. Arnold, to the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 798) to require the claims of the subjects of Spain and the citizens of the United States arising under the treaty of 1819 to be submitted to some foreign government, and that the President of the United States be authorized, with the consent of the King of Spain, to select such umpire; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also introduced a bill (S. 799) to prohibit the judges and courts of the United States from authorizing the borrowing of money by receivers on the security of railroad or other corporate property beyond the amount of its annual net income; also from appointing receivers of railroads without satisfactory evidence of the condition of said company by an examination of its books and the persons in charge of its receipts and expenditures; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CALL. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Railroads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Railroads, if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It should go to the Committee on the Judiciary. It is purely a judicial bill, and one of the highest importance.

Mr. CALL. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM. What is the title of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be again read.

The Secretary read the bill by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I hope that motion will not prevail. I do not think the Committee on the Judiciary are very favorably inclined to the passage of bills restricting the powers of United States courts in reference to corporations. I do not think that a majority of the committee sympathize with the people in their opposition to the accumulation of these great railroad properties in the ownership of a small number of persons, through the manipulation of courts and receivers, to the detriment of the rights of lawful creditors, and in violation of the rights of contract and the obligations of the charters of such corporations.

This bill is imperatively required by the necessities of the people. The condition of the laws under the decisions of the courts upon the subject was before the Committee on the Judiciary of the last Congress, and received little or no consideration.

If there can be any reason given why such a bill should not pass, I have never heard it. I do not believe there can be a plausible reason given why such a bill should not receive favorable consideration and prompt passage.

The evils connected with this subject to the people of the different States, and the injuries to creditors having lawful claims on the part of corporations obligated by their charters and their contract with the States to construct railroads have been caused by the unauthorized and unlawful proceedings of the United States circuit and district courts. These proceedings have sometimes been the cover for the commission of the greatest wrongs. The cases are numerous, have been the subject of public discussion and comment for years, yet we have had no action from the Committee on the Judiciary. That committee, which has been specially charged with the protection of the people against the use of the courts by these wrongful combinations, has been silent. For years this condition of things has existed, and this special subject has been before the Judiciary Committee as constituted at the present time, and with all its learning, and the great reputation of its members, nothing has been done. While, therefore, I think there is but little hope of awakening the attention of the Senate to this subject at this time, I desire to express my opinion, and if possible to have the report and to have the bill considered by some committee not already committed to an adverse report of the bill. I shall take occasion at an early day to address the Senate on this subject and to present the record of a cause in the United States courts which will, I think, excite some surprise, comment, and thought by Senators.

Mr. CULLOM. I inquire of the Senator from Florida if he did not make a motion to refer the bill?

Mr. CALL. I did. I moved to refer the bill to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM. Then that is the first motion before the Senate, I suppose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Florida to so move.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it rather obvious that if this is anything it is a question for the Judiciary Committee; but as the Senator from Florida, who has this subject-matter particularly at heart, is very desirous that it shall not go to the Committee on the Judiciary, which I am very much afraid is not extremely inclined to meddle with the exercise of the discretion of courts, I will withdraw my motion and leave it to the Senate to do, without any action of mine, whatever it likes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Florida to move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CALL. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. PLATT. There has already been some law of Congress passed with reference to the mineral laws of the United States, I believe, in Alaska.

Mr. PLUMB. There was a law of that kind passed, but the Senator can readily see that, as the question as to the land laws will be under consideration and will undoubtedly lead to some discussion during the present session, the question of the extension of those laws as they are, or as they may be, to the Territory of Alaska, belongs more to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Lands than any other committee, I think.

Mr. PLATT. I have no choice about it. There have been other bills introduced looking to some provisions whereby parties doing business in Alaska could get title to land, but not going to the extent of extending the land laws over the Territory of Alaska. Some of those bills have been referred to the Committee on Territories. I have no choice whatever about the matter. I would as soon the Public Lands Committee should have such bills as the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to a change of the reference of the bill to the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. VEST. We extended the mining laws over Alaska on the report of the Committee on Public Lands. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. As I understand the present bill (which I am very glad has been introduced, because it is a very great want, and I myself prepared a bill to that end), it is proposed to extend the general land laws, and it ought to go to the Committee on Public Lands. That is the appropriate committee, because if that subject-matter does not go before them there is nothing to go before them at all.

Mr. PLATT. I made no objection to the reference suggested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the reference of the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

THE SWENSON PATENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PLUMB on the 13th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be requested to investigate the issuance of letters patent numbered 371528 to Magnus Swenson, of date October 11, 1887, and if in his judgment the same is invalid upon any ground, that he commence suit promptly to have the same canceled or the use of the same by said Swenson or any one claiming under him perpetually enjoined.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, the subject-matter of this resolution, and the issuance of a patent to Mr. Swenson is of very great importance to the people of this country, because if Mr. Swenson's claim is substantiated it may prove that he has a very important control over the manufacture of sugar from sorghum, the value of which has been demonstrated by experiments made by the Government, and the opportunity for the obtaining of this patent having been presented to Mr. Swenson by reason of his employment by the Government. I should be very glad, therefore, to have the resolution passed, in order that the Attorney-General may be admonished to do whatever he may find legally within his power in the direction of setting aside the patent at an early day.

I do not care to enter now upon any general discussion of this question, because probably that may come up later; but I wish to say that the resolution does not in any way imply censure upon the Commissioner of Agriculture, nor is there anything in the entire transaction which, in my judgment, would warrant any imputation of neglect of duty upon his part. He has been very zealous and active in all the matters that refer to the development of the sugar industry, and I feel that it is due to him to say that his zeal has been not only conspicuous, but has been intelligently directed. For the purpose of setting him right, if anything of that kind shall be necessary, I ask that a letter, which he addressed to me during the last month, may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, COMMISSIONER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., November 11, 1887.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your favor of recent date, referring to the claims of Messrs. Swenson and Parkinson to certain alleged valuable discoveries made by Professor Swenson in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum-cane, has been received, and is one among a vast number of letters whose writers have already filed their protests against such action.

The basis of these claims, as I am informed, is a patent issued to Mr. Swenson, dated October 11, 1877, and numbered 371528, a copy of which I inclose. The claim of the patentee is "for the prevention of the invertive action of the organic acids in the cane chips upon the sugar during the process of extraction, by adding to the diffusion-vat carbonates of the alkaline earths." Unfortunately, I was not informed of Mr. Swenson's application for a patent until October 20, when I immediately requested the Patent Office to suspend its action until I could be heard. The Commissioner of Patents then informed me that the patent had been issued ten days prior to my letter, and that nothing could be done by his office.

It is unnecessary to rehearse to you all that Congress has done toward aiding experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum, for your own energetic efforts in its behalf make the facts well known to you; but there are certain facts relative to this alleged discovery which I will briefly state. You are aware that an appropriation of $94,000 was made for "continuing and concluding experiments in the manufacture of sugar, by the diffusion and saturation processes, from sorghum and sugar cane." Experiments under this appropriation were carried on in part at Fort Scott, Kans. By virtue of this authority I appointed, on July 19, 1886, Mr. Swenson an agent of this Department "to superintend, under the direction of the chemist, the experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum at Fort Scott." The result of the work at Fort Scott for the season of 1886 is contained in Bulletin No. 14, a copy of which I inclose you. On page 28 you will notice that certain experiments were made to correct the acidity in the battery, which caused an inversion of a portion of the sucrose into glucose. Among the experiments enumerated was one with the "addition of freshly precipitated carbonate of lime to the extraction bottle." The analyses showed that the acidity was diminished by two-thirds and the inversion of the sucrose largely prevented by the treatment. The report continued: "If a few pounds of such a carbonate could be evenly distributed in the chips, it appears reasonable to suppose that this inversion would not take place." As is customary with all professional men, Professor Wiley gave credit to Professor Swenson for suggesting this experiment. I dwell upon this because it may have an important bearing upon the case. The letter which transmitted this report to me was dated December 21, while Professor Swenson did not make application for his patent until December 29, or eight days later. On this latter date Professor Swenson did file an application for a patent for this suggestion and its results, forgetting that it had been made by him while in Government service, and being a part of the duties for which he was employed and paid, and that the experiments were conducted at the Government's expense for the benefit of the people at large.

I am satisfied, however, after due investigation, that Mr. Swenson's patent is invalid, and that he can not appropriate to his own personal use the results of experiments conducted by this Department while he was in the employ of the Department as an agent to superintend those experiments. Mr. Swenson was merely an employé of the Government, engaged to carry on experiments for the perfecting of a process that had been conceived, devised, and was then in the process of execution by this Department, and any suggestions made by him in the course of his employment were a part of the duties for which he was engaged and paid, and such suggestions belonged to his employer. I refer you to the case of the Agawam Wool Company vs. Jordan, 7 Wallace, 583, for the law as to the relation of employer and employé touching suggestions made by an employé in course of experimentation; also, to the dictum of Justice Field in case of the United States vs. Burns, 12 Wallace, 253, that discoveries of an officer of the Government made in experiments carried on by the Government belong to the Government.

I am further satisfied that Mr. Swenson's improvements are neither new nor novel by way of correcting the acidity in the saccharine solution, and for this reason the patent is likewise invalid. This process has been known for many years, and used by those engaged in the manufacture of sugar in the various stages of the work. In 1874 one James Duncan was granted a patent in England for the use of carbonate of lime in neutralizing free acids in saccharine evolutions, and in various scientific publications references may be found of the use of the carbonates of the alkaline earths for this purpose. I am having prepared a list of patents issued in England, France, and Germany for the use of these carbonates for this purpose, and also citations from various scientific works showing that this method has been well known to scientists for many years. This list I will furnish you as soon as completed. I have had an examination made of the citations made by the Patent Office, and am surprised to find that not a single citation of a foreign patent was made in this case, nor was any publication cited against this extraordinary claim.

I am determined that the people of this country shall not be deprived of the free use of all the results obtained and processes employed in experiments carried on by this Department under the direction of Congress, and I shall call the attention of the Attorney-General to the facts in this case, and request him to take such legal proceedings as will secure, if possible, the cancellation of this patent.

I have not hesitated to express this determination in a large number of cases within the past few weeks. * * *

I thank you for your letter. It will give me great pleasure, and place me under renewed obligations to you to have such advice and assistance as it may be your pleasure to render in this contest to protect the rights of the public.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

NORMAN J. COLMAN,

Hon. P. B. PLUMB,
Emporia, Kans.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, since the assembling of Congress, in response to a resolution adopted by the Senate on my motion, the Commissioner has repeated somewhat more amply the statement of facts in the case; but it does not change the situation at all. In addition to that, the Commissioner, as suggested in the letter, has requested the Attorney-General to bring suit to set aside the patent. What action the Attorney-General may take on that request I do not know; and it may be that he has not regarded the request as in any way authoritative. It certainly would not be improper for the Senate, under the circumstances named, to make such a request, and it would be a valuable expression on this subject which I ask to have the Senate make.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, there are two difficulties, I think, with this resolution. In the first place, I think that it is, if not the first time, among the first times when the Senate of the United States has called upon an officer of the executive department, by request, to do anything affirmatively in regard to any part of the public business. We have in some cases requested the Secretary of the Interior, I remember, to suspend some action, which was partly in his discretion, pending action by Congress by law, as suspending the issuing of a patent or whatever it might be. That is one thing; but here we request the Attorney-General to examine a question of law which is committed to him by the statutes, acting under the direction of the President of the United States, and then we request him, if in his opinion there is any chance for success, to institute suit in the courts of the United States to set aside this patent.

On the second branch of it we are met with a difficulty which has appeared in the courts to be quite formidable. I confess that for myself I should have no difficulty about it. I believe that the Attorney-General, acting under the authority of the President, who is bound to see that the laws are faithfully executed, may, without any specific authority from Congress, bring a suit in any proper court of the United States to assert the rights of the United States in the way of canceling a patent which has been improperly issued, and that has been held in respect of lands; but it has been stoutly contested within a year or two, and with some apparent success in the courts, that in respect of a patent for an invention, the Attorney-General, or the President of the United States either, has no authority without a statute giving him that authority to bring a suit to set aside such patent; and if Mr. Attorney-General were to act upon this suggestion or without it to bring suit, in the present state of the law, in the circuit court of Kansas, or in the District of Columbia, or wherever was the proper place, to set aside this patent, the first question would be one of jurisdiction, and it would be stoutly insisted on the other side, as it has been in some other patent-right cases, that the United States had no authority to institute any such suit, and hang it up nobody knows how long there.

So then the thing to be accomplished on the case, as it is stated by the Senator from Kansas, is to pass a joint resolution, which will have the force of law, requiring the Attorney-General to investigate this business, and bring suit under the authority of that statute to set aside this patent, and then the person who has obtained the patent will have to meet the case on the merits; and not keep the thing dancing in the courts on a mere question whether the United States, without an act of Congress, had a right to move at all.

I hope for both these reasons that the Senator will allow this resolution to go to the Committee on Patents, or Agriculture, or anywhere, in order that a report may be made which shall be effective.

Mr. PLUMB. If the resolution should go to any committee it ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary, because, according to the opinion of the Senator from Vermont, the whole question in his mind probably turns on the power of the Attorney-General to commence this suit in the present state of the law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no question in my mind; I think he has the power; but unhappily some judges and a great many lawyers think the other way.

Mr. PLUMB. I am not speaking of the Senator's opinion, but of his statement of the doubts which have arisen. That being so, the Judiciary Committee is the proper committee for considering the subject; but it seems to me that that matter can wait until after some action is commenced. We are approaching the season when, if anything is to be done during the next twelve months in regard to the manufacture of sugar by reason of the new processes developed by the expenditure of public money, steps will have to be taken, and I think it is important to have this proceeding instituted early. I think the Government ought to assert its interest at an early period on this very important question, and then if the Committee on the Judiciary, of its own motion or prompted by instruction of the Senate, shall see fit to report a general bill or joint resolution on the subject which should finally affirmatively give the authority and which might be used in the proceedings which the Attorney-General might meanwhile institute, that would also be a very good thing. In the mean time the Attorney-General, in the investigation which he is asked to make by this resolution, will investigate not merely the question of the patent, but he will investigate also this other question of jurisdiction, and if he is satisfied that the courts would have jurisdiction on his motion to entertain the proceeding, then, I think, it would be very proper that he should institute it. He is the law officer of the Government, and until the courts have declared otherwise his opinion is practically binding.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask that the resolution may be read again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

Mr. BUTLER. Does it give power to the Attorney-General to institute suit?

Mr. PLUMB. This does not confer any power on him which he does not already have. It simply requests him to make investigation, and if in his judgment suit can be maintained, to commence it.

The Secretary read the resolution.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The pending resolution, I believe, is prompted by information that Professor Swenson has obtained a patent for a certain process based upon information which he had obtained while in the employ of the Government in connection with experiments made by the Government. It seems to me that the resolution drawn by the Senator from Kansas does not fully meet the case. It rests in the discretion or in the judgment of the Attorney-General as to whether that fact is a cause for invalidating the patent. I propose to reach that point by an amendment in line 4, after the word "ground," adding the following:

Or was procured by reason of information obtained from experiments made by the Government.

The Attorney-General might find that the fact was that the patent was procured by reason of information which was obtained while the patentee was in the service of the Government in connection with experiments made by the Government; and it might be the judgment of the Attorney-General that that would invalidate the patent. Consequently if we wish to reach the whole matter it is necessary to amend the resolution, so that if he finds that the patent was procured by means of information obtained while in the service of the Government, he should then institute suit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 4, after the word "ground," add "or was procured by reason of information obtained from experiments made by the Government;" so as to read:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be requested to investigate the issuance of letters patent, numbered 371528, to Magnus Swenson, of date October 11, 1887, and if in his judgment the same is invalid upon any ground, or was procured by reason of information obtained from experiments made by the Government' etc.

Mr. PLUMB. While I do not think that adds to the scope of the resolution, I have no objection to its being added.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I have objection to the passage of that resolution in either form. We have executive, legislative, and judicial powers in this Government, and the resolution offered by the Senator from Kansas says in effect and in terms that the Attorney-General shall be instructed to perpetuate an injunction. If I understood the resolution, that is what it says. If we are a legislative branch, we have no right to instruct the Attorney-General, who belongs to the judicial or the executive, to perpetuate an injunction. I would not vote for this resolution if I knew that the Senator's premises were right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I think there is a great deal of doubt whether the resolution ought to pass. I should be very willing to vote for a general law authorizing the Attorney-General to bring suits in all cases where there is reasonable cause to believe a patent invalid; but to declare that he shall bring suit to invalidate this patent because the inventor discovered the invention while in the service of the United States, or on the broader ground contained in the amendment, on account that it was in the course of experiments made by the United States, seems to me utterly illogical. Neither fact affords any ground whatever for declaring the patent invalid. Shall we limit the human mind in discoveries to facts which have not been elicited by Government investigation? Why is not an invention as meritorious, why are not the operations of the intellect in discovering some great mechanical principle of benefit to mankind because the facts on which the intellect operated were discovered in the course of experiments made by the Government and at its expense? The invention is of as much service, and has as much right, and is as commendable, and ought to be as much encouraged if he discovers some great benefaction from facts elicited by the Government as from any other source. The Government has no claim on his thought, on the operations of his intellect, and I think the ground of this resolution therefore is entirely erroneous.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it my duty to move that this resolution be referred to the Committee on Patents. There is great danger in a precedent of this kind of one House of Congress undertaking to induce executive action by its affirmative action; and the difficulties in respect of getting at the very thing I have suggested are, although not in my own mind, in the minds of a great many people who are wiser than I, very formidable.

I remember even in a case in which the United States had a direct pecuniary interest in one of the Western States connected with some of the Pacific railroad mortgages, action was brought in the circuit court of the United States—I am not sure but in Kansas; certainly, I think, in Kansas, or Nebraska, or Colorado—where it was necessary for the protection of the interests of the United States as a second mortgagee, that the United States should appear and defend their interest, and the Attorney-General, acting properly, as I think, directed the district attorney there to appear for the United States to defend the interests of the Government. The question was immediately raised on the other side, by the first mortgagees or whoever they were, that he had no business to be there, because there was no statute which authorized the Attorney-General or the district attorney to appear there in a suit to which the United States was not a party on the record; and as the United States was not a party on the record, and could not be in the circuit court as the law then stood, the Government was entirely silenced; it could not go forward nor stay out, so far as protecting its interests were concerned.

I only mention that to show the doubts which exist in the minds of eminent judges as to the authority of the executive department, acting through the Attorney-General, to institute proceedings or defenses in courts where the United States is not a direct party, besides the other case that I have referred to of bringing suits to set aside patents for inventions.

In this state of things, sympathizing entirely with what the Senator from Kansas wishes to accomplish, I feel bound, as a matter of propriety, to move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Patents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the resolution, with the amendment, be committed to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the question whether the Attorney-General of the United States can, without due lawful authority, institute a proceeding of this kind is pending in the courts, it having been lately held by one of the circuit courts, the circuit judge having sitting with him a very learned and eminent district judge and an especially able judge in regard to that class of questions, that no such authority exists. I know nothing about this particular patent or this particular grievance. It seems to me, however, that before the Senate commits itself absolutely to a legal proposition of this kind against the opinion of at least one circuit judge, it would be well to have the question examined.

Mr. PLUMB. I would sooner have the opinion of the Senator from Vermont on the question of law than the opinion of any circuit judge of the United States. But, admitting that the doubt exists, which the Senator from Vermont says does exist, and also the doubt which is raised by the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, how shall we resolve that doubt? I think in a case of this kind we ought clearly to resolve it in favor of doing something for the people who are interested in this invention, and not resolve it in favor of the merely technical right (if it exists at all) of the patentee. Suppose, after all we have done, it turns out by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States that the Attorney-General had this authority, we should then appear as having been in the attitude of resolving the doubt in favor of the patentee, and by that action having prejudiced the public interests. So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing, when a case arises where there is an even balance, which is the utmost that can be said in this case, to decide it in favor of that which appears to be for the public interest, and take the chances. Nothing can result except a bill of costs at all events.

If Swenson has a valid patent, he has it upon a mere technicality. Properly speaking, morally speaking, he has no right to a patent. He was in the employ of the General Government; every step of the experiment which resulted in the development of this process was taken by reason of the expenditure of the public money, and except for the expenditure of public money this process could not have been developed, at least at the time that it was.

Under all the circumstances of the case, it seems to me that we can very well afford to ask the Attorney-General to commence a suit to settle these very important issues that arise by reason of the issuance of the patent, and I do not think we can afford to hesitate for a moment.

Mr. GRAY. Before the Senator takes his seat I should like to ask whether the best way to resolve that doubt on such a grave question as to the authority of the Attorney-General under the laws of the United States at this time would not be to introduce a bill conferring that authority upon him?

Mr. PLUMB. That would do; but we all know that by reason of the fact that the House of Representatives will not be ready for business until after the holidays, and that under the natural and necessary operation of their rules a bill of that kind may be indefinitely postponed, may be never reached at all, and therefore we shall come to that season of the year when this process is to be used, if at all, without anything having been done. I propose, as far as I am concerned at least, to do that which we can do by the shortest cut, and which, even if of doubtful legality, is morally right and in the interest of the public.

Mr. BUTLER. I shall vote for the resolution of the Senator from Kansas, although in doing so I confess I am voting somewhat in the dark; but I give notice now, if he will pardon me, and ask to have read a resolution which I shall offer immediately on the disposition of this resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the resolution proposed by the Senator from South Carolina will be read for information.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and they are hereby, directed to inquire and report to the Senate whether in the present state of the law the Government has the power or the Attorney-General of the United States the authority to institute judicial proceeding to vacate a patent for an invention on any ground whatever, and that they may report by bill or otherwise; and that said committee have leave to report any special matter.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not offer that as a substitute for the resolution of the Senator from Kansas, but I simply give notice that after his resolution is disposed of I will offer it for consideration.

Mr. TELLER. I would suggest to the Senator from Kansas to amend his resolution by inserting, after the word "ground," the words "if in his judgment the suit can be maintained." Then the Attorney-General will be simply directed to investigate the whole question, and if he thinks the suit can be maintained he will bring it, and if he does not he will not. It seems to me there ought not to be any very serious question as to whether the Government can maintain a suit to set aside a patent, though it has been decided, as I know it has been in some courts, that it can not be done.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to the amendment, although I think it is clearly involved in the present form of the resolution.

Mr. TELLER. I think what is committed to the judgment of the Attorney-General is the simple question whether the patent is invalid. I desire to submit to him further whether the suit can be maintained without further legislation.

Mr. PLUMB. The question before the Attorney-General as to whether the patent is valid will undoubtedly involve the determination of the question as to whether the court will so declare. That is the only practical view of the case. If it is invalid, the court will so decide; and of course if not, it will not be invalidated. I have no objection to the amendment, however.

Mr. TELLER. The Attorney-General might believe it was invalid, and yet he might believe that he had no standing in such a suit. I do not desire to offer any amendment which can be considered as hostile to the resolution, because I am in harmony with it; but if an amendment is not objectionable, I will move to amend by adding, after the word "ground," these words:

If in his judgment a suit can be maintained in the name of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to commit being pending, the resolution is not open to amendment until that is disposed of, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. TELLER. I will withdraw the amendment, then.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It may be regarded as accepted.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask whether the resolution is the same as the one I have on my table. I do not understand it as some do. The resolution as read in the beginning is not the same as I see it presented here. There is no provision here about directing the Attorney-General to perpetuate an injunction. I should like to have the resolution read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the original resolution.

The Secretary read the original resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is pending, and also the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

Mr. PLUMB. I accepted the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware has been accepted. The resolution will be reported as amended.

The Secretary read the resolution as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Kansas also to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. It will be, then, to insert, after the word "ground," in line 4 of the resolution, the words "and if in his judgment a suit can be maintained in the name of the United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read as amended by the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Government" in the first amendment it is proposed to insert:

And if in his judgment a suit can be maintained in the name of the United States.

Mr. TELLER. After the word "ground," in the fourth line of the resolution, I propose to insert those words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware has already been inserted after the word "ground."

Mr. TELLER. Then let it come in immediately after the Senator's amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read as amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be requested to investigate the issuance of letters patent No. 371528 to Magnus Swenson, of date October 11, 1887, and if in his judgment the same is invalid upon any ground or was procured by reason of information obtained from experiments made by the Government, and if in his judgment a suit can be maintained in the name of the United States, that he commence suit promptly, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the motion to commit the resolution.

Mr. CALL. I think we are about to commit the Senate to a very untenable doctrine and a very injurious one, namely, that a discovery made by an inventor upon facts elicited in Government experiments shall not be the subject of a patent. What reason can be given for such a proposition as that? Does a man contract for anything but the special services that he shall render? Does he agree that his own discoveries, the results of his intellectual processes in the future as in the present, shall belong to the Government because he is an agent of it, because he is an employé of the Government? He agrees to give it his time and attention, not his discovery of the laws of nature, of great facts and propositions which being turned into practical form and use shall be of advantage to men; and why shall we waste time in discussing a proposition of this kind, that because a man is employed by the Government to give his services in some well-known and ascertained process or line of action or employment the undiscovered processes which the genius of man discovers from facts elicited in this course of experiments shall also belong to the Government?

There is no such contract as that. There is no reason in public policy why that should be true. If it be a new discovery or invention, then Congress is authorized to secure to him the right of exclusive use or ownership for a limited time. How far that should go is a matter of public policy as to what limitation should be placed upon it. Perhaps some. Possibly when an invention becomes of great general use there should be a limit placed upon the price; but the Constitution expressly gives to Congress power only to secure to authors and inventors, and to none others, the right to their discoveries. Is the Government the inventor or the author because an employé of the Government discovers a new fact, a new mechanical principle, a new thought, an invention? There is no logic in that; there is no foundation for that; there is no reason in public policy for it in my opinion. It is limiting that great inventive success, that great talent which has produced so much benefit to the country. Where it is used for the purposes of monopoly to an unreasonable extent it ought to be limited; but we should not place principles of limitation which are erroneous and unsound upon it and make them the law of the country.

This resolution declares, so far as the Senate has power to do so, that a man in the employment of the Government who makes a new discovery of some law of nature, of some process heretofore unknown, shall not have the advantage of it simply because he is in the employ of the Government, and that all his intellectual faculties belong to it outside of the special purpose for which he is employed. I shall vote against it. A poor man's talent is all that he has, and the Government does not need to take that away from him.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Suppose this discovery is made in the process of experiments carried on by an employé of the Government with the Government's money, then what?

Mr. CALL. It does not make the slightest difference. The Government does not buy the man's brain for anything but the special purpose for which it employs him, namely, for his use of the already ascertained laws of mechanical operation which may be used. It does not contract with him that whatever new discoveries may be made in the vast field of nature shall be compensated for by his employment to use those already known and discovered. There is no such contract, and there ought to be none. If a man discovers some great and new principle, some great benefaction to mankind, shall it be said because it was done with the Government's money that that was contemplated in the contract? Certainly the proposition denies itself; the proposition that when a man contracts with the Government to render a specific service he also contracts for all new discoveries in the unknown realm of nature which may be made by him.

The Government is a poor paymaster at the best, and invention will not be promoted by denying the inventors all benefit from their inventions. On the contrary, the power of monopoly, the power of money, will be promoted by the principle of securing the sale of a man's genius before he has made an invention.

Mr. HAWLEY. It seems to me the essential question in this case is this: A proposition is presented that the Senate has a right to direct an executive officer to take certain action. I should like to know where the Senate can find that power. The resolution does not say that if he judges he has the right to begin a suit he is requested to begin one, or that the Senate advises him to begin one; but it says, under certain conditions, resolved that he commence a suit promptly. I have yet to learn that either branch of Congress has a right to give positive instructions of that description to that officer. I do not see how I can vote for the resolution. I sympathize with the general purpose of it, but I shall vote for the reference. I am willing to vote for a joint resolution or bill which shall confer on the Attorney-General any power thought to be wise in such cases, but I can not vote that the Senate shall order an executive officer in such a case.

Mr. BECK. I shall vote for the proposition of the Senator from Kansas as a preliminary matter, at least, so that we can get the opinion of the Attorney-General in regard to this question. We shall at least ascertain what it is necessary for us to do, and I shall do it because, from very long experience and observation here, I have found that whenever we constituted a board, whether it was to examine into guns, or ships, or anything that the Government wanted, or even to a canceling-stamp for the Post-Office Department, and when we furnished them the money and all the facilities for making the investigation, and without our money and without the facilities furnished by us they would have had no idea of the suggested matters in the nature of improvements that they afterwards patent; and thus we are constantly handicapped by men who have obtained all the information that enabled them to take out their patents through the means and instrumentalities that we have furnished and through the money we have put into their hands for the purpose of doing it. If there is any way of breaking that up, I want to break it up.

If I were to go over the history of the last twenty or thirty years of inventions that have been claimed by men who have been the trusted officers of the Government to make improvements for the use of the Government, in guns and in the machinery that we have needed, it would be found that a very large majority of the patents have been taken out by men who were in our employ and who obtained the information to take them out by the means furnished by the Government and the information elicited under the investigations made with the money of the Government. It can do no harm for us at least to get the opinion of the Attorney-General as to what our rights now are, so that we may guard against these abuses by law, if need be, in the future.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the very trouble about it, as I think that we are transcending the limits of our proper jurisdiction as one branch of the legislative body known as Congress in even requesting the Attorney-General, or the head of any other Department, to make any affirmative investigation or to do any affirmative thing whatever except to send information. It has happened in the history of this country more than once when the House of Representatives—I think the Senate never did it—has called upon the Attorney-General for his opinion regarding some matter, that he has reported to them that, with the greatest possible respect to their wishes, they were acting out of their place in asking him for his opinion; that the department of the executive is entirely separate from one branch of the legislative department as well as both, and while he would be glad to oblige them he had no authority, without unsettling the proper balances of the Government, to comply with their request.

Now, to be sure, this is in a slightly different form. It asks him to investigate and form an opinion, and having investigated and written it out, instead of sending it to us he is to act upon it in bringing a suit. If he had gone that far and had an opinion on file there, then we should have a right to ask him what it was; and so if we wanted his opinion we could get it by two steps, first, asking him to investigate and make up an opinion, and that having been done, offer a resolution to have him send it in.

My objection to it is the fundamental one that it is improper for either House to do this affirmative thing in this way; and to illustrate it, suppose the House of Representatives should be of opinion that Mr. Swenson was the most meritorious inventor that had ever existed, that he had been a great public benefactor, and that he ought not to be disturbed, and accordingly they should pass a resolution this afternoon, having heard that we had passed this one, requesting the Attorney-General to take no steps about it at all. It would be absurd; but the House of Representatives has the same right to request him that we have. It is more than a private request, as we understand; it is the request of an organized legislative body; and they have the same right to request him not to do a thing (much greater in fact) than we have to request him to do something. That is what I object to in respect to the nature of this resolution, and it is one that I think Senators ought to take into mind, because it is the first step in unsettling what has been the course of the Government, and will lead in the end, being a precedent, to a great deal of evil in asking the heads of Departments to investigate and requesting them in one way or the other to do this, that, or the other thing as one House may deem proper. It is an invasion or the rights and privileges of the other branch of Congress as well as an impertinence to the executive branch, as I think.

Mr. HARRIS. If it was made a concurrent resolution, would it remedy the evil, in the Senator's opinion?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would as it respects the relations of the two Houses of Congress, but not as it respects the executive branch.

Mr. PLUMB. I am entirely willing to wait until we hear from the House of Representatives on that subject, without taking it for granted that they will be insulted by this action on our part.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it seems to me that there is an undue sensitiveness this morning on this question. I recollect in the history of the Executive Departments of this Government when the Senate did not hesitate to pass resolutions of this character and some of a more extended character than this. I recollect that even committees of this body have seen fit to request from time to time various heads of Departments that they should or should not proceed. That undoubtedly was an interference not justified; but it has grown up to be quite a common practice in the Senate. I will admit that I think it somewhat questionable myself whether it ought to be done or not, but this is not the first instance of it by any means. It has been done for a great many years by resolution and otherwise. It is true that several Attorneys-General have declared that such a resolution was simply advisory to them, and that they were in a position to disregard it if they saw fit. When Mr. Hoar was Attorney-General he declared that it had no weight, except the weight that any other advice would have, and I believe that has been pretty generally the view of the Departments.

I recollect one instance where this body asked that there should be no action taken in the case of a private land grant, but the patent was issued as it properly ought to have been, for it was apparent to the executive department that there had been no attention whatever paid to the subject here; that the resolution had passed through this body without the slightest attention from any one. I recollect another case where a distinguished soldier was drawing two pensions, and this Senate, or rather a committee of the Senate, requested the Secretary of the Interior to withhold one of the pensions to which he was entitled, but the Secretary of the Interior proceeded, as he rightfully ought, to pay the pension to the soldier. I recollect that a few days later the Senate passed a resolution condemnatory of the action of the Secretary of the Interior, and I know that there was but one single man in the Senate who knew what that resolution was. Nobody else paid any attention to it whatever.

I do not suppose the Attorney-General will proceed in this case unless it comports with his judgment to do so. He is not bound by any request we make. It is simply the same thing to him as if the united body of this Senate as individuals should request of him to proceed.

I have no objection to the resolution if the facts are as I understand them in this case, and if the law is, as it seems to me it ought to be, that the man who, while engaged in studying a single question for the Government under its pay, discovers something greatly advantageous to the people of the United States while so employed, ought not to be allowed (although it is possible the law may permit it now) to obtain a patent for that discovery. He ought not, in equity and right, to be allowed a patent, and thus take the discovery away from the people and make it useful only to himself; and I am quite willing (although I am in favor on all occasions of keeping the executive and legislative departments as free as possible from friction and interference) to say in this case to the Attorney-General at least, "If in your judgment the facts are as we understand them, and the law is as we have indicated and believe it to be, then you bring this suit."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to commit the resolution.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, there is no question whatever in my mind that the Senator from Vermont is entirely right. We do not require much argument to know that it takes the two Houses of Congress and the approval of the President to make a law, and that any action of the Executive Departments recognizing the action of either House is merely a matter of courtesy on their part. So I think that objection to this resolution is well founded, although I suppose by the common practice of the Government as it has prevailed for years, the Attorney-General would give polite consideration to any request made by this body, but it could not have the force and effect of law. It could not be compulsory, but would be only a proper respect to the chief department of the Government, or rather to the Senate as one of the two Houses, charged by the Constitution with duties legislative and executive of supreme importance, and, to a certain extent, with the supervision of the executive department.

But the Senator from Kentucky said—and I rose to make this answer to what he said—that he had known for many years men in the employ of the Government using the Government's money in its experiments and then obtaining a patent for some new invention that had been discovered in the course of their employment. If any such patent has ever been issued, it has been by the fraud of the Interior Department or their ignorance. The law has always been to the contrary. The law has always been that a discovery once used anywhere is a dedication to the public. The invention must be new and unused and not put in service, or a patent can not be obtained for it.

Now suppose the man who made this discovery, let it be an important one, should say to himself, "If I make this known it belongs to the Government," what incentive is there to him to apply his inventive talent in that direction? What advantage to the Government and the people of a law of nature remaining undiscovered, or a mechanical process that might be of great use being unknown? If it is known and used it can not be patented. Why give a bribe or an encouragement or an inducement to an inventor not to make his discoveries known, but to keep them in his bosom?

That is the public policy which lies at the bottom of this question, and I insist that there is not and can not be a law, and it never was intended that there should be a law, that should say to an inventor, "You must confine your discoveries of the new processes of nature, heretofore undiscovered, to facts which have not been elicited by Government action or in the course of Government investigations." What matters it to the public where the facts came from which have led the human intellect into a new path of thought and a new path of discovery? The patent laws are founded upon the idea that the new invention of undiscovered processes, the new idea, is of benefit to mankind, and the Constitution says Congress has power to encourage it by giving an exclusive right to the discoverer, and to him only, to the inventor, not to the Government, which can not either discover or invent, but can only use the ideas or inventions of its citizens.

Mr. BECK. One word, Mr. President, and only one word. What I say is that when a man is placed in a position by the Government to make an investigation, to ascertain what improvements can be made, whether in a machine or in a gun or in a ship, or in any part of any of them, and the Government furnishes him with all the information it can obtain in this country and from all the other nations of the earth, pays for the models, pays for all that is now known, and pays him, if you please, three, five, or ten thousand dollars for his services to aid it in obtaining something better, then after having given him all the models and all the information, and furnished the money that enabled him to do it, he does, out of the materials thus furnished by the Government and while in the pay of the Government, accomplish what the Government employed him to accomplish, to get something better, he shall not have the right to appropriate the thing thus obtained through these instrumentalities and through these means, when he is the servant of the people and drawing wages from them, and take out a patent and claim the exclusive use of the article patented for seventeen years, and deprive the people of the United States, whose money he has received, whose service he has accepted, and through whose instrumentalities he has been enabled to produce this result. An act of that sort is a fraud upon his employers and in contravention of public policy.

Mr. CALL. I have only a word to say in reply to the Senator from Kentucky, and that is, that the case he states is not the case presented by this resolution. There might be a very proper case made on the ideas of the Senator from Kentucky, that would except from the operation of the patent laws such a case as he mentions, where a man is employed to use his brains for new discoveries and new processes; but that is not the case presented in this resolution.

This resolution proposes to instruct the Attorney-General to bring a suit because this man has made these discoveries while employed by the Government, and is therefore affirming a general principle by this body, to which I object. I might not object to a case where a man says, "I will sell myself to the Government to discover undiscovered processes in mechanics or in the practical arts of any kind."

Congress, by the Constitution, has power "to promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right" "to their discoveries"—not to the Government, not to their employers, not to the men who have bought their brains in advance, but to them. The public policy of promoting the progress of the useful arts sustains this construction of the language.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, there are two propositions made to the Senate now conflicting somewhat with each other, both of which I should like to vote for. It seems to me a proper thing to pass the resolution. It ought to be acted upon because it is a matter of haste, and I think the proper motion to be made, then, is for the reference of this whole subject-matter to the Judiciary Committee. I think——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending motion is to refer to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the question go to either committee. It ought to be considered. But let the resolution as it stands be first passed.

This invention, made by an employé of the Government with the aid of large expenditures of the Government, is said to be one of the most valuable and important inventions made of late years, especially in regard to an industry that at this time excites more interest among the people of the United States than any other industry, that is, the question how to utilize the sugar in the beet and in the cane—sorghum in the various forms. If this patent is allowed to stand in the way of the active experiments that are being made in that important process, it will prevent the planting of beets; it will prevent the growth of sorghum; it will prevent further inquiry into the best means of making sugar from the various agricultural products which have been proposed; it will stop the experiments made by the Government of the United States; and it is therefore not a slight thing. It is a matter of vital importance.

I think we have the right, as the Senate of the United States, to direct the attention of the Attorney-General to this matter; to inquire in the first place whether he has the power to test the validity of this patent without a law of Congress; and in the second place to give us such information upon the subject as will enable us to prepare a bill that will enable the Government of the United States in honor to withdraw its patent in case it has been illegally or fraudulently obtained.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Will the Senator allow me to state to him what my understanding of this resolution is? If it was requesting the Attorney-General to give us information I would not object to it; but we are requesting him to proceed as an executive officer. If we were asking him to give us information then I could see no objection to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. We ask the Attorney-General to ascertain for himself, to satisfy his judgment upon two points, and then we say if he does find that this patent was invalid, that it was issued without authority of law, or that an agent of the Government under these circumstances could not take out a patent for this process, then he shall commence a suit. It seems to me that is plainly within the usual, ordinary limits of the power of either House of Congress—not that it is mandatory upon him, because the Senate has no right to order the Attorney-General what to do, but it may direct him to inquire in regard to the state of the law upon various propositions, and if he finds the law so and so, if the patent was illegal, was obtained by a person who had no right to a patent, then a direction of the Senate that he should commence a suit to invalidate that patent is perfectly proper. Such a request would be proper, even if it came from a citizen of the United States, much less from the Senate of the United States. Therefore, I desire to see this resolution passed promptly, and I think the sooner the better, to-day rather than to-morrow, and then, if any Senator desires, as we all do, that these other questions be referred to the Committee on Patents for inquiry and report, that may be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to commit the resolution to the Committee on Patents.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that the resolution as it is drawn is a little ambiguous in one phrase. The resolution says that the Attorney-General be requested to investigate, and if he finds a certain matter, that he shall institute suit. Whether it is meant by that to have the request apply to that, or whether it is meant that the resolution should be a peremptory order to bring suit if he finds the fact so, is the point. I would suggest that the Attorney-General be requested to investigate and to bring suit. I suppose the Senator intended the word "request" to apply to the whole resolution.

Mr. PLUMB. I think it does, without any question whatever.

Mr. HOAR. The substitution of the word "to," for the word "that" in the latter clause would bring it within the idea suggested by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], and remove the ambiguity. Governed by the word "resolved," it is a peremptory order, and governed by the word "requested" it would be a request.

Mr. CULLOM. There have been two or three amendments made, and I should like to hear the resolution read as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read as it stands amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be requested to investigate the issuance of letters patent No. 371528 to Magnus Swenson, of date October 11, 1887, and if in his judgment the same is invalid upon any ground, or was procured by reason of information obtained from experiments made by the Government, and if in his judgment a suit can be maintained in the name of the United States, that he commence suit promptly to have the same canceled or the use of the same by said Swenson or any one claiming under him perpetually enjoined.

Mr. PLUMB. On the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, I move to strike out the words "that he," prior to the word "commence," and insert the word "to;" and after the word "commence" to insert "such;" so as to read:

and if in his judgment a suit can be maintained in the name of the United States, to commence such suit promptly to have the same canceled, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Now I ask that the resolution of which I gave notice be read. I offer it for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and they are hereby, directed to inquire and report to the Senate whether in the present state of the law the Government has the power or the Attorney-General of the United States the authority to institute judicial proceedings to vacate a patent for an invention on any ground whatever, and that they may report by bill or otherwise; and that said committee have leave to report any special matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

GOVERNMENT POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

Mr. SAWYER. I should like to call up the motion I made the day before yesterday to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the resolution submitted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], on the 12th instant, for the raising of a select committee on the postal telegraph.

Mr. STEWART. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to give way to allow me to call up a bill for the purpose of making a few remarks.

Mr. SAWYER. I do not like to interfere with my friend, but I would prefer that the motion to reconsider should be acted on if the Senate is willing to come to a vote upon it. I do not want to spend a minute's time on it. If, however, there is to be any discussion upon it, I do not wish to interfere with the right of the Senator from Nevada to make a speech.

Mr. BUTLER. It is very likely there will be discussion on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SAWYER. Yes, I will yield; but I give notice that I shall call up the motion to reconsider early on Monday morning.

COIN CERTIFICATES.

Mr. STEWART. I move to take up Senate bill 430.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 430) to provide for the issuance of coin certificates to circulate as money.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have the bill read through, as it is short.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be read at length.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person may deposit at any mint or assay office of the United States both gold and silver bullion, in quantities not less than 5 ounces of gold or 80 ounces of silver, and demand and receive therefor coin certificates representing $1 for 25.8 grains of gold, and $1 for 412½ grains of silver: Provided, The gold and silver bullion so deposited shall contain, by weight, in 1,000 parts, 900 parts pure metal. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall prepare proper certificates and furnish the same to the various mints and assay offices of the United States, to be exchanged for gold and silver bullion as herein provided.

SEC. 2. The certificates issued under this act shall be in such denominations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That no certificates shall be issued of a less denomination than $2, nor of a greater denomination than $1,000. Such certificates shall be redeemable at the Treasury of the United States, or any of the subtreasuries thereof, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, in either gold or silver bullion, at the option of the United States.

SEC. 3. The bullion received under this act shall be melted into bars under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That at least 75 per cent. thereof shall be melted into bars of not less than 8,000 ounces weight, and be deposited in the Treasury, or any subtreasury, mint, or assay office of the United States, in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct.

SEC. 4. The coin certificates issued under the provisions of this act shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for all dues, public and private, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in contracts heretofore made, and when received by the United States, except for the purpose of redemption, shall be reissued.

OBJECTS OF THE BILL.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the bill under consideration is a proposition to place the finances of the United States on a metallic basis, and to treat both of the royal metals—silver and gold—as money metals, and to allow any person to deposit at any mint or assay office in the United States gold or silver bullion and receive coin certificates therefor at the rate of $1 for 25.8 grains of standard gold and $1 for 412½ grains of standard silver. These certificates are to circulate as money and be a legal tender for all debts and liabilities, except such as have heretofore been contracted payable in coin, and are to be redeemable at the Treasury, or any subtreasury of the United States, in either gold or silver bullion, at the option of the United States. This option will at all times enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay out the cheaper bullion, if there shall be any difference in value, and thus prevent a rapid withdrawal of bullion from the country at times when the balance of trade is against the United States. This power in the Secretary would, it is believed, be a conservative force, and tend to check the shipment of bullion from the country. The Bank of England accomplishes the same end by an increase of the rate of interest. After the passage of this bill no more gold is to be coined than is necessary to meet existing obligations payable in coin, and no more silver is to be coined than is necessary to meet such obligations and supply small coin for change. Coining money, except for small change, is expensive, wasteful, and occasions immense loss of the precious metals without any corresponding advantage in return. It is provided in the bill for melting the bullion received under its provisions into large bars, which will render storage inexpensive and be an absolute safeguard against theft. It is believed that the United States now has an opportunity to acquire a large amount of gold and silver as a basis for a circulating medium, which will make her credit irreproachable both in peace and war.

MONEY.

There is no question more important or less understood than money. If people would rely more on their own observations and pay less attention to refined theories the question of money would be better understood. Every one knows that when money is plenty prices go up and times are good, and that when money is scarce prices go down and times are hard. It is pretty generally understood that if the volume of money increases too rapidly prices are unduly inflated and a reaction must follow, and it is also equally as well understood that if the volume of money is decreased to any considerable extent bankruptcy and ruin must necessarily follow.

It would seem from this universal experience that the quantity of money in circulation is the principal thing to regulate. For example: If the money in the United States were doubled the price of property would be enhanced in a similar proportion; if one-half the money were destroyed the price of property would depreciate about one-half. The increase and decrease of the volume of money have a similar effect upon the obligations of contracts. When the greenback currency in the United States was at a discount of about 50 per cent. a debt could be paid with one-half the amount of property that was required to liquidate it before the inflation of the currency. The contraction of the currency since the war has doubled the obligations of contracts made during the period of inflation. This is illustrated by the fact that although we have paid about one-half of the national debt, that which remains will require more bales of cotton, more bushels of wheat, and more days of labor to pay it than it would have done to pay the whole at the time it was contracted. It is the manifest duty of the Government to furnish the people with honest money. No money will constitute a just measure of the obligations of contracts unless the volume of that money bears substantially the same ratio to the population. In other words, honest money must be the same in amount per capita at all times.

MONEY IN ANCIENT TIMES AND ITS FLUCTUATIONS.

We are informed by Mr. Jacob, who, without disparagement of others, has published the most accurate history now in existence of the production and consumption of the precious metals from the earliest period of which any record exists down to the year 1832, that at the commencement of the Christian era there was $1,800,000,000 in circulation in the Roman Empire, which was practically the civilized world. From that time until the discovery of gold and silver in Mexico and South America very little gold or silver was mined, and the quantity of money in circulation decreased at the rate of more than one hundred millions each century. The amount of both metals in Europe when the first gold and silver were brought from the New World certainly did not exceed one hundred and fifty millions. I do not pretend to say that this contraction of the currency was the sole cause that produced the Dark Ages, but I do say it was a sufficient cause to destroy any civilization. Nothing is so depressing to every industry as contraction. The term "contraction" signifies more ruin and misery for a people than any other expression known in any language. While it lasts the obligations of contracts continually increase, debts and mortgages grow heavier, and labor grows cheaper. Fifteen hundred years of continued contraction reduced the Roman people (the proudest and freest of ancient times) to barbarism and slavery. The discovery of gold and silver in the New World revived the civilization of the Old; wages advanced, property advanced in price, serfs and bondmen became free, the light of science commenced to dawn, and art and the spirit of invention were revived.

MODERN CIVILIZATION.

Modern civilization would have been impossible but for the constant stream of gold and silver which the mines of a New World furnished. The increase from the first discovery until the Spanish-American revolutions was steady and very nearly kept pace with the increasing population. About the commencement of the present century mining in Mexico and South America was greatly retarded by revolution and war in those countries. During the first half of the present century the product of the mines did not more than supply the loss and wear of the coin in circulation and the gold and silver consumed in the arts. The consequence was hard times. The amount of gold and silver coin in Europe and America in the year 1850 was from eighteen hundred to two thousand millions, and varied but little from the amount in circulation in the Roman Empire at the commencement of the Christian era, although the population was more than twice as great as that of the dominion of ancient Rome.

THE NEW DISCOVERIES IN CALIFORNIA AND AUSTRALIA.

Since 1850 the product from the mines of the world has reached the enormous sum of about $3,000,000,000. This has produced its natural effect. The discovery of gold in California and Australia inaugurated a new era in the history of civilization. The advance in wealth and prosperity between 1850 and 1876, notwithstanding many destructive wars, was phenomenal. Since 1876 that prosperity has been checked, not from the exhaustion of the mines, but from the attempt to destroy one of the precious metals for the purpose of enhancing the value of bonds. In the natural order of things, after allowing for loss, abrasion, and use in the arts, there ought to have been added to the supply of the circulating medium in Europe and America over two thousand millions from the products of the mines since 1850, making a grand aggregate of about four thousand millions of gold and silver circulating as money in Europe and America.

DEMONETIZATION OF GOLD.

In 1854, when the gold mines of Australia and California were most productive, the bondholders of Europe became alarmed. Chevalier, of France, declared that the unlimited quantity of gold already discovered would destroy all fixed incomes, and amount to repudiation. England and France both sent commissioners to Australia and California to ascertain the facts. The commissioners reported that there was a limit to the amount of gold that might be expected from the placer mines then opened. This quieted apprehension in England, but France, by a monetary commission, continued to investigate the subject until 1869, when that commission reported that the quantity of the precious metals was increasing so rapidly that it was necessary to demonetize one of them. Germany and Austria in 1857 ceased to coin gold.

WHAT DEMONETIZATION MEANS.

It may be well to state here what is meant by demonetization of gold or silver. These metals have been regarded as money metals for more than two thousand years, and they have had fixed values at the mints of the civilized world; that is to say, the nations of the world have received a given weight of gold or a given weight of silver for a fixed amount of coin. Both these metals have been interchangeable for coin at some fixed ratio between the two from time immemorial. When either of these metals is excluded from the mint it is demonetized.

Austria and Germany excluded gold from their mints in 1857, as before stated, and thereby demonetized gold. Other nations discussed the question of the demonetization of gold, and probably would have followed the example of Germany and Austria if the gold mines had continued as productive as when first discovered and no silver mines had been found, because the bondholder has a fond attachment for that particular precious metal which for the time being is scarcer and more difficult to obtain than the other. He would make a debt contracted to be paid in copper payable in diamonds of the same weight if he could accomplish it, and his power in the monetary world has always been nearly, if not quite, irresistible.

DEMONETIZATION OF SILVER.

After the war between Germany and France, and after the Comstock mines had been so developed that the production of silver was likely for a time to exceed that of gold, Germany changed her tactics and excluded silver from her mints, with the avowed object of enhancing the value of bonds. In 1873 the silver dollar was omitted from the list of coins of the United States. I will not stop to discuss the history of that legislation. If anybody knew at the time that the silver dollar was omitted from the list of coins, certainly nobody knew the effect of such omission. Nearly every member of Congress of the two Houses appeared to be ignorant of where, when, or how silver was demonetized. The country never understood that one-half of the world's money was to be destroyed. No such question was discussed among the people. The President of the United States did not know that he had signed a bill demonetizing silver for nearly two years after he had signed the mint bill, and on the day he signed the specie resumption act he sent a special message to Congress wherein he advocated the erection of one or more mints at Chicago, St. Louis, or Omaha, for the purpose of coining enough silver to meet the requirements of the resumption act. The reason why it was not generally understood that silver was demonetized in the United States for several years after the passage of the act was because some of the mints of the civilized world continued to receive silver and treat it as a money metal, but before the expiration of the year 1875 all the mints of Europe and the United States were closed against silver, and that metal fell within the following year about 15 per cent.

PARTIAL REMONETIZATION OF SILVER.

Then followed the act of February, 1878, under which the Government has purchased two million dollars' worth of silver per month and melted it into coin. This made a market for silver to the extent of twenty-four millions a year, but it did not remonetize it. The Government purchased it at the lowest market price; in fact, purchased it according to the English quotations.

UNFRIENDLY ATTITUDE OF THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

The last Administration left silver at a discount of about 15 per cent. The depressing effect of the unfriendly attitude of the present Administration, which has followed the policy of several of its predecessors, has been most damaging to silver. The re-enforcement of the Republican Administration by the Democratic against the use of that metal as money has caused a further decline of about 15 per cent., until the market price of silver as compared with gold is at more than 25 per cent. discount.

WHO IS BENEFITED BY THE WAR ON SILVER?

The question naturally arises, Who is benefited by this war on silver? The question is easily answered—the original promoters of the scheme openly avowed the purpose—it was to enhance the value of bonds. In round numbers the national indebtedness of all the nations of the world is twenty-six thousand millions; the national debts of Europe and America are twenty-five thousand millions. It is estimated that other obligations which are regarded as securities, including corporate debts both public and private, and mortgage securities, are about three times as great as the national debts—say seventy-five thousand millions. These added to the national debts give a grand total of one hundred thousand millions. If, when these debts were contracted there were four thousand millions of metal currency in circulation in Europe and America, and that after such contracts were made the amount of money in circulation was reduced to two thousand millions, it is manifest that such indebtedness would be doubled. In other words, it would take twice as many days of toil, twice as many bushels of wheat, and twice as many bales of cotton to pay these debts as it would before the reduction. The absolute demonetization of silver would certainly work that reduction, and that is why silver has been excluded from the mints of Europe and the United States.

THE BONDHOLDERS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The bondholders of the United States have always operated in conjunction with the bondholders of Europe. The injustice of their present demand that silver shall be demonetized is aggravated by the fact that they have been most liberally treated by the United States. They bought bonds when the country was in peril at a great discount—say, 50 per cent. less than their par value in gold. The bonds originally issued were payable in lawful money called greenbacks, interest payable in coin. With these same greenbacks the United States paid its soldiers and those who furnished supplies and munitions of war. After peace was restored, Congress, in March, 1869, passed an act declaring that these bonds were payable in coin. Men with any sense of justice would have been satisfied to be paid in coin when the contract could have been discharged with greenbacks, without asking for the destruction of one-half of the world's money. On July 14, 1870, the act under which the entire debt of the United States was funded was passed. That act provided that the bonds issued thereunder shall be payable in coin of the then standard value—that is, of the standard value of July 14, 1870. The standard value of the coins then in existence was regulated by law; 25.8 grains of standard gold, or 412½ grains of standard silver constituted a dollar. The silver necessary to make a silver dollar was at a premium of 3 per cent. at that time, the American ratio being 16 to 1, and the ratio of the balance of the world was regulated by the French mint, which fixed it at 15½ to 1. This premium prevailed until long after the passage of the act of 1873 demonetizing silver.

After the passage of the act omitting the silver dollar from the list of coins the bondholders contended that their bonds were payable in gold alone. To meet this pretense both Houses of Congress, in January, 1878, by a vote of nearly three-fourths in each House, declared that the bonds of the United States, according to the contract between the bondholders and the Government, were payable in either gold or silver coin. Notwithstanding this, the Treasury Department has at all times assumed that the bonds were payable in gold alone, and constantly complained that silver coin was accumulating in the vaults of the Treasury and that the people were refusing to take it. If silver is really cheaper than gold it is the duty of the Secretary to pay the bonds in that metal; in other words, it is his duty to save for the United States all he legally can. He has no right to donate the people's money. The bondholders have no reason to complain. They obtained their bonds with money at a discount of 50 per cent. The partiality of the Treasury Department in paying them in gold alone has raised the bonds to a premium of from 25 to 30 per cent. in gold, which, added to the discount, gives them a profit on the money invested, in addition to interest, of at least 75 cents on the dollar.

EFFECT ON FARM PRODUCTS.

While the bondholder has grown rich by this war on silver, how has the farmer fared? Wheat, for example, is cheaper to-day than it has been for one hundred years. The farmer of the United States is forced to sell his wheat on a gold basis. He is suffering the full force of the demonetization of silver and the destruction of one-half of the world's money. The gold coin in circulation to-day does not exceed the gold and silver coin in circulation forty years ago, while the population in Europe and America has about doubled in that time. This is not all. The fact that silver is over 25 per cent. discount in the United States is developing the productive industries of India, where silver remains at par with gold. The speculator buys silver in America at a discount of 25 per cent. and exchanges it in India for wheat and cotton at par. He has 25 per cent. advantage in the London market over the importer of wheat from America, who buys for gold. In 1879, before cheap silver had stimulated the production of wheat in India, the United States shipped to Europe over 150,000,000 bushels of wheat and sold it for over $190,000,000. In the same year India exported only 4,000,000 bushels. In 1886 the United States shipped less than 58,000,000 bushels of wheat to Europe and only received for it a little over $50,000,000, while in the same year India's shipment rose from 4,000,000 in 1879 to 39,000,000 bushels in 1886. There has been no overproduction of wheat to reduce the price. There has been no increase in the last ten years except in India; on the contrary, there has been a decline in quantity throughout Europe and America.

In June, 1886, an animated discussion occurred in London at the Colonial Chamber of Commerce. Upon the subject of the low price of silver and its effect upon the prosperity of India, Sir Robert N. Fowler, M. P., a London banker and ex-lord mayor, said that "the effect of the depreciation of silver must finally be the ruin of the wheat and cotton industries of America, and be the development of India as the chief wheat and cotton exporter of the world." Notwithstanding these plain facts and the universal depression of the farming business of the United States, caused by the low price of products growing out of the demonetization of silver, the bondholders still insist upon their demands.

CAN THE UNITED STATES ALONE REMONETIZE SILVER?

We are told that if we change our policy and receive silver as a money metal we will be ruined, and that we can not do it alone and must have the co-operation of nations. This is not true for several reasons. Pass the bill I have introduced requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to receive all the silver and gold bullion that is offered, pay for it in certificates according to the standard value fixed by our law, that is, at the ratio between the two metals of 16 to 1, and the value of silver as compared with gold will instantly be established throughout the world at 16 to 1. For no person in Europe, Asia, Africa, or America will sell his silver for a less price, exchange deducted, than he can get for it in the United States. France, in 1785, passed a free-coinage act, by which she received all the gold and silver bullion presented, paid for it at the ratio between the two metals of 15½ to 1, and maintained that ratio throughout the world for nearly one hundred years, until she finally joined the conspiracy to demonetize silver about the year 1875. England in 1816 demonetized silver in England but maintained it as a legal tender in India. This had no effect upon the price of silver, for no one would sell it for less than he could obtain in France. The attempts of the various Governments between 1854 and 1860 to demonetize gold had no effect upon the value of gold because the French mint was open to receive it at a fixed ratio. The action of Germany in 1871 and 1873, the demonetization of silver in the United States in 1873, and the sale by Germany of all her silver on hand, did not depress the silver dollar of the United States below par until France repudiated silver and all the mints of Europe were closed against that metal.

WILL THE COUNTRY BE FLOODED WITH SILVER?

The only argument against the proposition to remonetize silver is the allegation that we would be flooded with that metal. I ask from whence the flood can come? There is no considerable amount of silver bullion in either Europe or America—probably not five millions. It is shipped to Asia as fast as produced; no one dare hold it, fearing some adverse action of the Government whereby it will be further depreciated. But we are told that Europe will demonetize her silver and sell it to us. There is in all Europe less than one thousand millions of silver coin. I omit the debased token money, amounting to near four hundred millions, which would be of no value in our market. This one thousand millions circulates in the countries where it was coined as a full legal tender on a par with gold at the ratio of 15½ to 1. To procure it the speculator must pay an ounce of gold for 15½ ounces of this money silver. If he were to import it and present it at our mint (our ratio being 16 to 1), he would be required to add one-half ounce of silver to the 15½ ounces he imported before he could get his ounce of gold in return. This would be a loss of over 3 per cent., besides exchange.

AMOUNT OF SILVER WANTED.

We can not look to Europe for the supply of silver we need. What harm could it do to have gold and silver bullion, dollar for dollar, as security for the paper now outstanding? About two hundred and seventy-two millions of national-bank notes, including gold notes, remain. Of these one hundred and two millions are in the Treasury, leaving less than one hundred and seventy millions in circulation. These will soon be retired without further legislation, by the payment of the bonds upon which the national-bank notes are issued. We also have three hundred and forty-six millions of United States notes, commonly called greenbacks, which, if changed into coin certificates, by the deposit of the coin, would be equally available as money. The Comptroller of the Currency informs us that there has been a decrease in the circulating medium since 1883 of over one hundred and forty-six millions. At least one hundred and fifty millions ought to be added to that amount to correspond to the increase of population, to keep our circulating medium substantially the same per capita. These several sums show that it would require nearly nine hundred millions of bullion to place our currency on a metallic basis and relieve the country of its depressed condition, resulting from contraction. In addition to this it would require an annual supply of gold and silver equal to the production of this country to keep pace with the growing population of the United States. If it were possible to obtain bullion enough to dispense with the use of all paper currency, not secured by gold and silver in the vaults of the Treasury, we would certainly have a sound currency and be on a metallic basis. This can never be done with gold alone. The ruin that will be produced by contracting our metallic currency one-half, and thereby destroying the debtor class, will not end our troubles. The supply of gold is, and will be, insufficient. There is no prospect of any increase in the volume of gold coin from any production to be anticipated, and if silver is demonetized, so that the mining of that metal is stopped, one-third of the product of gold will be cut off, for at least one-third of all the gold that is produced comes from the silver mines, and is in combination with silver. If the present supply can be kept good it is all that can be expected. The prospects for silver mining are better than for gold. It is a more stable industry, and with the enhanced price of silver, resulting from treating that metal as a money metal, will so stimulate that industry that we may anticipate an increased production, and by the use of both metals a stationary amount of money in circulation per capita can probably be maintained.

PAPER MONEY.

I do not deny the proposition that if the Government could be trusted to devise and adhere to a plan whereby paper money could be kept in circulation and the volume of it at all times bear the same ratio to population, that is, the same per capita, it would be as good and perhaps better than gold and silver; but schemes for that purpose heretofore adopted have generally been failures. Our present system is most defective. We find our paper currency decreasing in volume every year. No one has yet devised a scheme whereby that volume could be regulated according to population. We have seen the civilization of ancient Rome fade and decay under the baneful influence of fifteen hundred years of contraction. This may be urged as an argument against the use of metallic money; but it is answered by the history of modern times. A new civilization has been born and developed under the inspiring influence of the production of gold and silver. The growth and development of that civilization has been continuous since the year 1500 until now. This growth and development was somewhat checked by the Spanish-American wars, which between 1800 and 1850 nearly cut off the supply of precious metals. Since the year 1850 the development of the resources of nature by the hand of man surpasses comprehension. The intelligence, skill, and invention of the present age seem the result of magic. The increase of the wealth and power of nations since the discovery of gold in Australia and California is without a parallel. Neither wars nor famines have materially checked the vitalizing influence of the bounteous stream of gold and silver which has come from the mines. The only financial embarrassment worth naming in the last forty years has resulted from the war on silver. The attempt, which has almost been consummated, to destroy one-half of the world's money has produced its legitimate results in the low prices of all farm products, cheap labor, and hard times.

Why should the selfish desires of those who would destroy silver as money be heeded? Why should not both silver and gold be treated as money metals? Why should the immemorial usage of exchanging each at the mint for money be disregarded? Why should this generation be denied the blessings that flow from abundance of silver and gold? Have not the skill and energy of the generation now passing away made it possible to produce these metals in such quantities as to furnish the world with a reasonable supply as a basis of circulation? It seems cruel and unjust for the sake of a favored few to harass and depress the masses, to force an unnatural contraction while the means of a steady supply of money is at hand. The passage of the bill now under consideration will certainly place the United States upon a higher financial plane and with a safer basis for circulation than any other nation in the world. Now is the time to obtain silver by taking advantage of the situation. It may be possible to secure such a supply as we really need; at all events we can avoid that terrible gulf of contraction which is yawning before the financial world by the threatened destruction of silver as money. The passage of this bill would emancipate the United States from the European monetary systems and give her the advantage of being the clearing house of the world for both gold and silver, advance the price of labor, wheat, cotton, and exports of all kinds, and secure permanent and lasting prosperity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, in the chair). What action does the Senator from Nevada desire to have taken on the bill?

Mr. STEWART. Let it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the bill will be so referred.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, December 19, 1887, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 16, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday last was read and approved.

HOLIDAY ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HATCH. It is a proposition affecting the order of proceedings of the House. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Monday, December 19, 1887, they stand adjourned until Thursday, January 5, 1888.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, there being no committee to which this resolution can be referred, I ask its present consideration, and upon it demand the previous question.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] for five minutes, if he desires to make any remarks.

Mr. REED. Before the gentleman yields to me for any remarks, I should like to ask him what is his reason for this course of action. I hope he will explain to the House why he takes this course—why he makes this motion.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Maine, it may be necessary merely to state that this is the resolution which it is usual and customary to offer in the House just before the Christmas holidays—certainly at the first session of every Congress.

But I will state frankly to the gentleman, that we have been here in session since the first Monday of December, and it is well known to every member of the House and is evidenced by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that we have accomplished nothing. We are waiting for the Speaker to announce the committees of this House; and I am satisfied from my personal knowledge, from what I have seen myself of the extent to which his time is being taken up by members of the House and others who are interested in committee appointments, that it is utterly impossible for the Speaker to properly appoint these committees until after the two Houses shall have taken their holiday recess.

I make this motion in the interest of the transaction of the public business in this House, as well as for the convenience and comfort of the Speaker himself. The Speaker has had two weeks of the session to make the acquaintance of the many new members who have been returned to the House, and has learned their wishes, and also the wishes of the older members in regard to the organization of the various committees of the House. Now, if the Speaker, after this acquaintance with the new members, can have a few days to himself there will be no trouble about the organization of the committees. But as long as his time is taken up by the meeting of the House day after day, and adjournment over from day to day, nothing else being accomplished, and no possibility of accomplishing anything, it is utterly impossible for the Speaker to prepare the committees with that care which the importance of the subject demands.

That, Mr. Speaker, is my reason for asking the Senate to concur with the House in this adjournment; and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and the House will bear in mind that the first day of the new year falls on Sunday, and of course Monday will be observed as the holiday. The resolution, if adopted, will give members who reside at a distance from the capital Tuesday and Wednesday to return to Washington and be here in time for the opening of the session on the day fixed. That is the reason why I name Thursday, the 5th, instead of an earlier date.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I think the peculiar condition of the business affairs of this country renders the action which has been taken, or rather the non-action which has been suffered by the Democratic side of this House, matter for legitimate comment both here and before the country. I think that, taking it all in all, it is without a precedent under the circumstances.

Many changes are proposed in the rules of the House—we have adopted none—and yet it is proposed here to adjourn until after the holidays and commence where it has been the custom heretofore to begin at the opening of the session.

If there were no public matters of deep interest before the country awaiting legislation, such a course might awaken only a passing comment. But to-day we are pressed upon by a serious public duty, which is the reduction of a surplus which is coming into the Treasury in a manner calculated, under the management of the Treasury Department, to become a serious embarrassment to the business affairs of the country.

We are all agreed, at least upon this side of the House, that the surplus should be reduced, and we stand ready now, before the holidays, to make one reduction in which the other side of the House are agreed, and that is in relation to the tobacco tax; and I hope that an opportunity will be given us before we separate, by the powers that be and are to be, to vote thereon and show to the country some disposition proper and suitable in this matter.

If the other side of the House find it somewhat difficult to range themselves alongside of the recent message which has been sent them we can all well understand it, and we can all give them the assurance of our respectful sympathy [laughter on the Republican side], because it was a summons from, I hope to some of the Democracy, a very great way off, and it requires that they should traverse a very great distance before they can get alongside of their pioneer brother at the other end of the avenue. [Laughter.] If time is wanted for that purpose I hope the gentleman from Missouri will frankly say so. If there is a proposition—if gentlemen on the other side of the House have grave doubts how they shall comply with the suggestions of the message; if after they have made up their minds, in the interest of moderation and reform, that the more advanced of them will be contented with the destruction of a few of our industries, and they need time to select those which they see fit to destroy, that would be ground, of course, for his motion; and I hope the gentleman from Missouri, with the frankness which always characterizes him, will tell us if that is the reason underlying his resolution.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that it would be possible to introduce a resolution of adjournment in this House and yield to the gentleman from Maine without his improving the opportunity——

Mr. REED (interrupting). I think I have improved it.

Mr. HATCH. To make a political harangue.

I do not think he has improved it. It is the same old speech that we have been listening to here for the last ten years.

Mr. REED. And the same old enemy. [Laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. If the gentleman from Maine had not had the opportunity time and again during both sessions of the Forty-ninth Congress to vote for the consideration of a tariff bill, and always voted against it, there might be some strength and sincerity in the position he is occupying to-day. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But, Mr. Speaker, time and again this side of the House, by an overwhelming majority, has offered to the other side an opportunity to reduce taxation, and the surplus in the Treasury, and the gentleman from Maine by his voice and vote has always stood, as the leader of that side of the House, in opposition to the consideration of the subject. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The Democratic side of the House will give the gentleman from Maine an opportunity early enough—an opportunity in this session—to ventilate his views upon the tariff question and vote a reduction of the surplus in the Treasury. If he wants the opportunity they will give it to him soon enough, he may depend upon it.

Mr. REED. Why not now?

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman knows well enough why not now.

Mr. REED. That is very true.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman knows that is all clap-trap talk. He knows that until the Committee on Ways and Means is organized and has had time to originate and bring into the House a bill for consideration, there can be no fair examination of the question or consideration of it in the House. It is to give the Speaker an opportunity to form the committees of the House, and in the interest of the public business of the country, that I offer the resolution.

I yield now five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. My friend from Maine [Mr. REED] seems to have been suddenly converted. [Laughter.] I do not think there has been such a sudden conversion from the time of the Apostle Paul, when he was changed from Saul to Paul.

I do not know why the gentleman from Maine should urge upon the Speaker an immature making up of these committees. We have no rules of the House to-day. We have no committees formed for the consideration of the tobacco tax or any other matter connected with the reduction of the surplus. Why can not we, on a matter of so much consequence, give the Speaker the opportunity which other Speakers have had under similar circumstances? We know the Treasury has a plethora; we know this plethora tends to destroy business; we know that it tends to paralyze the very channels of business itself; we know that it hurts the farmers and the artisans of the country. We all know there should be relief.

It comes with an ill grace from the gentleman from Maine, the leader on that side of the House, to make these sinister, ironical, sarcastic objections against the message of the President. I can recall the time very well when the most eminent men on that side of the House, before our surplus had piled up so high as it is now, insisted on the reduction of the tariff on various articles to prevent the surplus. Among the rest was the gentleman's own old leader, the gallant man from Maine with the white plume; among them also his own Senators, Mr. FRYE and Mr. HALE, urged the reduction of the tax on salt and other matters, and almost everything else, unless it might be on lumber.

What I should like to see would be every man in this House regarding this question as outside of politics. It is a business question. It is so regarded by eminent men, now in the Senate, who sat on that side of the chamber when General Schenck's bill came in, revising the tariff in a way to reduce the revenue $40,000,000. The question was then regarded as a matter higher than party. It is a business matter in every sense of the word. We have now on this floor members from Republican States, like Minnesota and others, who are demanding a reduction of the surplus. But that can not be done by picking out one article. It must be done by the adoption of a general and wise system. It must be wise in order to be stable and permanent.

I hope when we come to the consideration of a tariff bill all parties will unite in endeavoring to deal with this matter according to the best interests of the whole people, and not with a view to the aggrandizement of one man or one set of men, or one party, who may have designs for 1888. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. I ask my friend from Missouri to permit me to offer a substitute.

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas for that purpose.

Mr. MILLS. I offer as a substitute for the pending resolution what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, December 22, 1887, they stand adjourned until Wednesday, January 4, 1888.

Mr. MILLS. I desire merely to state that that is an exact copy of the resolution adopted two years ago for an adjournment on the 22d of December until the 4th of January. I ask my friend from Missouri to accept that amendment.

Mr. HATCH. I do not think the amendment would give the relief to the Speaker that I propose by the resolution I have offered. But in deference to the gentleman who suggests the amendment I am willing to admit it, and I demand the previous question on the resolution and amendment.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, the Speaker stated that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HATCH. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes, 133; noes, 95.

So the previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment of Mr. MILLS was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

To Mr. HAYES, until January 10, 1888, on account of important business.

To Mr. MCSHANE, until after the holiday recess.

To Mr. DOCKERY, for ten days.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That on Monday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal and its approval, the Speaker shall call all the States and Territories in alphabetical order for bills and resolutions for printing and reference without debate; on which call joint and concurrent resolutions and memorials of State and Territorial Legislatures may be presented and appropriately referred, and on this call only resolutions of inquiry directed to the heads of Executive Departments shall be in order for reference to appropriate committees.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. HATCH. That motion is in order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have not yielded the floor for any purpose.

Mr. HATCH. Well, I will make the motion as soon as I can get an opportunity.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I have offered this resolution in the interest of the dispatch of the public business. It is well known that when all the bills are introduced on one day, as will be the case when we meet in January next, unless we have a bill day before that time, it will take several weeks for the Public Printer to print the bills which will be then introduced. On the other hand, if this resolution is adopted now, and bills are introduced before the recess, the Public Printer will have an opportunity during the recess to have the bills printed and ready for us when we resume our session. There is another reason for this resolution: During the recess the clerks will have full opportunity to distribute the bills properly among various committees. If we delay the introduction of bills until after the holidays, considerable confusion will result and several days will be lost.

I have nothing further to say, and will demand the previous question on my motion.

Mr. SPRINGER rose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I withdraw the demand for the previous question and yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I would have no objection to this resolution if it were amended (and I hope my colleague will yield for the purpose of allowing such an amendment to be offered) so as to allow only the introduction of public bills on next Monday, in order that they may be printed and be ready for distribution among members on the reassembling of Congress after the holidays.

It is well known to every gentleman who was a member of the last House of Representatives that at a corresponding period of that Congress it required three full days to call through the States for the introduction of bills. Now, after this week there will remain but three days before the holiday adjournment will begin, and it seems to me those three days should be devoted to the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules; for I assume that the committee will be announced to-day, and will by next Monday be ready to make report to the House. It is possible that when we determine upon our rules there may be some change in the committees of the House; and hence on next Monday we may not know what will be the appropriate reference for some bills, as we can not at that time know how the committees will ultimately stand.

Therefore I ask my colleague to allow an amendment, to insert in his resolution, after the word "bills," the words "of a public nature;" so that if we enter upon this business the States may be called through in one day, and the public bills may go to the Printer and be ready for consideration. We are not in a very great hurry to dispose of private bills which were pending at the adjournment of the last Congress. It is well known to you, Mr. Speaker, that when Congress adjourned last March more than ten thousand private bills were left undisposed of in the committees of this House. The printing of those bills cost the people more than $150,000. It is now proposed to open the flood-gates, to turn in again all those bills and have them reprinted.

At the proper time I wish to move an amendment to the rules, so that private bills, like bills for the establishment of post-roads and the improvement of rivers and harbors, shall be handed to the Clerk through the petition-box, and referred by him to the proper committees; and that bills which may be reported back from committees with a favorable recommendation shall be printed and placed on the Private Calendar for consideration. A vast majority of the private bills which may be introduced now have already been printed and can be found in the document-room; so that it is a useless expenditure of the people's money to print them again before they have received any favorable action. I hope, therefore, that if this resolution is to be adopted—and I think it premature—the amendment which I have suggested, limiting its application to public bills, may be agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have no objection to taking the sense of the House on the amendment which my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER] wishes to offer. In the mean time I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I have two objections to the proposition of my friend from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND]. In the first place, it would lead to confusion in regard to the reference of bills. Here are 325 members of the House, besides the Delegates from the Territories, each one, perhaps, loaded down with a number of bills. It will take us probably all of Monday and Tuesday, and perhaps Wednesday, to get through with the introduction of these bills. If introduced they will be piled up in the Clerk's room, for they can not be sent to any committees, as there will be no committees to which to send them. The result will be, as it was before when we engaged in this proceeding, that members will be hunting around for a week or two after they come back to find out where their bills have gone. It will facilitate business for members to keep these bill in their pockets or in their desks until the committees are appointed; and then the bills, immediately upon their introduction, can be distributed to the proper committees.

That is one objection to the proposition; I will state the other. Since we met we have been adjourning over from time to time in order to give the Speaker an opportunity to complete the organization of the House by the appointment of the committees. For this purpose he needs all the time he can get between now and the holidays. If we adopt this resolution we keep him in the House for three days, and thus deprive him of three days which might be devoted to furthering the organization of the House by arranging the committees. I hope the resolution will not be adopted; and, at the request of some gentlemen around me, I am constrained to move to lay it on the table.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have not yielded the floor for that purpose.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Illinois to demand the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I did.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will not the gentleman from Illinois allow this side of the House to be heard for a few moments?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am about to yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. ADAMS], who desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, by permission of my colleague, I propose a substitute for his resolution; and, after it has been read, I desire to speak upon it for five minutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House shall proceed on Monday next to a consideration of the rules of the Forty-ninth Congress and necessary amendments thereto, as the rules of the Fiftieth Congress.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, this substitute may have been too hastily drawn; but all will see its purpose. The proposition of my colleague [Mr. TOWNSHEND] is intended, as he says, to expedite the business of this House. The first business of the House is to have some rules under which it can act. It is true that the Committee on Rules is not yet appointed, and we have no official information as to when that appointment will be made. We all know that the function of a Committee on Rules, primarily, is simply to propose rules to be discussed and adopted by the House. A far more important proceeding than the appointment of the Committee on Rules is the discussion and adoption of a body of rules by the House itself. Now if we consume three days in the introduction of bills we come back here after the holidays with no rules under which we can act. But I think we can profitably spend a few days of this week, whether the Committee on Rules has been appointed or not, in discussing the rules. I am sure the public business will be further advanced in that way than by the introduction of a vast number of bills, which the members of this House can better keep in their desks, or pockets, for a few days longer.

It has been proposed that certain bills should not be printed. I do not know what the rule will be in that regard; but if the rules should be that private bills should not be printed, then it is important bills should not be introduced at all, public or private, until that question has been discussed and disposed of. The purpose of my substitute I think is sufficiently clear.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have not yielded for the purpose of having a vote on the substitute, and I wish to say that substitute is not germane to the resolution I have offered, and is therefore not in order. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, in the interest of the orderly business of the House, I am opposed to the introduction of bills, either public or private, or resolutions, for any purpose, except those which have reference to the organization of the House, until after the committees have been appointed. Suggestion has been made that a rule should be adopted, or at least will be proposed, that hereafter private bills shall go to the petition-box and not put upon the Calendar until after they have been reported back to the body of the House. I hope such a rule may be adopted, but in the absence of it, as a matter of course, if we proceed to a call of the States for the introduction of bills, these private bills will be introduced as others are. Now, in the orderly proceeding of the House the committees should be appointed before these bills are introduced. If, under the rules, bills are simply introduced in order that they may be referred to appropriate committees, we may understand—we may possibly know in advance the jurisdiction of each; but certainly in order that there may be no confusion let the committees first be appointed, and bills and resolutions can be introduced afterwards. That ought to be the course we should adopt. There is no necessity for the introduction of bills now. They can not be considered. A few of them that may be printed can be printed and returned very soon after they are introduced. But if we begin the introduction of bills some day next week, the States will be called, beginning, I think, in alphabetical order, and a few of the States will be called, and their Representatives allowed to bring in their measures, while the members of the States which appear later on upon the roll-call will have no opportunity at all, as an adjournment may shut off their chance until another call is ordered some time after the reassembling of Congress.

Mr. TOWNSHEND rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I think I am allowed to express the opinion that the Committee on Rules will be announced on Monday next. Immediately thereafter that Committee on Rules should meet and make a recommendation to the House in relation to the manner of introducing bills. We have determined to-day we will not adjourn until the 22d instant. We therefore have Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of next week when this question will, in all probability, be determined as to the manner of the introduction of bills, which will give us those days in which to introduce bills, if the House shall so desire. It is not well, in my judgment, to anticipate the wish of the House in that particular until the Committee on Rules has been appointed and had an opportunity to meet and make some sort of recommendation on the subject. I therefore suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that he allow his resolution to lie over until the time I have indicated. I think in the main the gentlemen of the House will be with him, but I also think the resolution should be allowed to wait until the action to which I have referred has been taken.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Personally I am indifferent as to whether the resolution is adopted or not. I have introduced it because of an expression on the part of a number of members that they desired a bill day before the holidays.

I am, however, impressed with the good sense of the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and am willing that the resolution may go over until Monday, leaving the question to be then determined.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the resolution will go over.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

DECEMBER PAY, CAPITOL EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. SPRINGER introduced the following joint resolution:

Be it resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and instructed to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1887, on the 22d day of said month.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, this is the usual resolution that we pass to pay the employés for the month of December before the holiday recess. If there be no objection to its present consideration, I ask the previous question upon the adoption of the joint resolution.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution (H. Res. 2) was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

DEATH OF HON. EDWARD W. ROBERTSON.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, the sad duty devolves upon me of making to this House the announcement of the death of my late colleague, Hon. Edward W. Robertson, late a member-elect to this House from the State of Louisiana, who died in August last, and to present to the House resolutions of respect to his memory.

I ask that the resolutions be read, and beg leave to state that I will call them up later, at the proper time, for further consideration, and for the expression, by members of the House, of the esteem in which the memory of the deceased is held.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. Edward W. Robertson, late a member of this House from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the Clerk of this House to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to communicate a copy of these proceedings to the Senate.

Mr. BLANCHARD. As a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, I move that the House do now adjourn.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 19, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 13th instant, Special Agent G. R. Tingle's report upon the conduct of affairs on the Seal Islands of Alaska; which, with the accompanying paper, was, on motion of Mr. FRYE, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 12th instant, all letters and other communications relating to the recent bonding of the Pacific Coast Steam-ship Company; which, on motion of Mr. FRYE, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, inviting the attention of Congress to the opinion of the Attorney-General in relation to the non-availability of a certain appropriation made by the act of March 3, 1887, for marking the positions occupied by the commands of the regular Army engaged in the battle of Gettysburgh; which was, on motion of Mr. ALLISON, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in pursuance of the act of July 16, 1870, a supplementary report of the United States surveyor-general of Arizona on the private land claim in that Territory known as Tres Alamo land grant, No. 17; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of March 2, 1887, certain information ascertained by an investigation of the claim of John R. Reynolds; which, on motion of Mr. BLAIR, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate communications from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with the eighth section of the act of July 22, 1854, for Congressional action supplementary reports of the United States surveyor-general of New Mexico on the following private land claims:

The Plaza Colorado tract, No. 149;
The José Antonio Lucero grant, No. 147;
The Cañon de Carnue, No. 150;
The Plaza Blanca, No. 148;
The Town of Atrisco;
Las Huertas, reported No. 144;
The town of El Rito, No. 151;
Ocaté, No. 143; and
The Guadalupita tract, No. 152.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims and printed, with the accompanying papers, if there be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. With respect to that large bundle of documents on a private land claim, it seems to me the question of printing them ought to be referred to the Committee on Printing before the order is made to print.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That reference will be made, if there be no objection.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair presents a petition of the constitutional convention of the Territory of Utah, praying for admission into the Union as a State. This petition is accompanied with engrossed copies of the constitution of the proposed State as adopted by that body, and if there be no objection it will be received and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. CALL. I have received a note requesting me to ask that the petition of the constitutional convention of Utah, which has just been presented to the Senate, may be printed in the RECORD. I hope there will be no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida asks that the petition of the constitutional convention of Utah Territory presented this morning by the Chair may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOM. I inquire if it is a very long document.

Mr. SHERMAN. It ought not to be printed, any way.

Mr. CULLOM. I think not, too.

Mr. PADDOCK. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being objected to, the question must be decided by the Senate.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator making the objection will withdraw it. What is proposed is nothing but a mere courtesy, and implies nothing either way on the main question. I received a polite note from gentlemen who are interested in this matter, making this request of me, and I have submitted it to the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. Do I understand that the paper comes from the Legislature of the Territory of Utah?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It comes from the constitutional convention of Utah Territory.

Mr. CULLOM. If it is not a very long document I have no great objection to its being printed.

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not understand that it comes from the Legislature of the Territory of Utah at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that when the reading of a paper is objected to the question must be decided without debate. The Chair understands the Senator from Florida to move that the paper be printed in the RECORD, which will be equivalent to its reading.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the paper?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a resolution of the constitutional convention of the Territory of Utah, transmitting to the Congress of the United States an engrossed copy of a proposed State constitution.

Mr. HARRIS. It certainly has been the custom to read resolutions of legislative bodies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This paper does not come from a legislative body.

Mr. CALL. No, it is from a constitutional convention.

Mr. BUTLER. The difficulty can be very easily obviated. The Senator from Florida has the right to read the paper himself. It is a mere question of convenience for him. If he does not read it I will, and put it in as part of my remarks. These people have a perfect right to be heard.

Mr. PADDOCK. This is not the result of any enabling act passed by Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would observe that this debate is out of order, the question being whether further memorials or petitions are to be presented to the Senate.

Mr. CALL. I ask that the memorial be read, if there be no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can only entertain the motion at this time by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. PADDOCK. I object.

Mr. CALL. Then I shall be obliged to move that the petition be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask the Senator to postpone his motion until resolutions are in order.

Mr. CALL. Very well.

Mr. PUGH. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report with amendments the joint resolution (S. R. 6) for the removal of all disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States upon Abram C. Myers. I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution reported by him. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the passage of the joint resolution, but I think it had better take its proper place unless there is some special reason for action upon it at this time. Bills and joint resolutions when reported ought to take their places on the Calendar. This matter can be called up to-morrow.

Mr. PUGH. A similar joint resolution passed the Senate and was sent to the House of Representatives ten years ago, and died on the Calendar on account of the expiration of Congress on the 4th of March, 1877. The applicant is over seventy-seven years of age. For these reasons I hope the Senate will make this an exception and that the Senator from Ohio will allow the joint resolution to be passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not the slightest objection to the joint resolution, but if the Senator will call it up to-morrow morning and comply with the rule it will save us probably from setting a bad example. Bills when reported from committees should take their place on the Calendar, and I think the rule ought not to be departed from unless some strong and special reason is given.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. BLAIR. I am directed by the Committee on Education and Labor to report back favorably and unanimously the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools, accompanied by a written report. I give notice that I shall call the bill up soon for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. BLAIR. I am directed unanimously by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 419) to enable the State of California to take lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections found to be mineral lands, to report it without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 190) for the relief of W. H. Tibbits, reported it without amendment.

ADMISSION OF UTAH.

Mr. CALL. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petition and accompanying papers of the citizens of the United States in the Territory of Utah, claiming to represent the wishes and requests to Congress of 200,000 American citizens, be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. President, I do not wish to make any remarks upon this subject, but I only intended to say that I can not conceive of any reason why 200,000 American citizens should not be heard through the RECORD as to what they want, whatever it may be. That is all I have to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from Florida?

Mr. PADDOCK. I interposed an objection to printing the petition in the RECORD because——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An objection being interposed by the Senator from Nebraska, the resolution lies over under the rule.

Mr. PADDOCK. Because I am distrustful——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska will pause. The resolution is objected to, and goes over under the rule.

Mr. PADDOCK. I wish simply to say that if the Senator from Florida is willing to let the resolution lie upon the table for consideration to-morrow, I may then withdraw all objection to the printing of the petition in the RECORD.

Mr. CALL. I will agree to that course.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to state as a reason for the objection I did interpose that I am distrustful of anything that comes from the Mormon Church, from which this document emanates. Therefore I always require a little time for examination, investigation, and reflection as to such matters before I determine my duty in respect of them.

Mr. CALL. I will agree to let the resolution lie on the table, though I can see no reason why 200,000 American citizens, whether they be trustful or distrustful, should not be heard. The question of the character of these citizens of the United States does not properly come up now and here. These people have asked to be heard, and they have a right to be heard and defended in all their rights as citizens. That is exactly what is the matter.

Mr. PADDOCK. It is a question as to the American citizenship of the people from whom the petition comes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table under the rule.

REVISION OF REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. PUGH. I offer a resolution and ask for its present consideration, with a view to submitting some remarks to the Senate upon the subject.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, 1, That the most important and pressing duty of the present session of Congress is to revise and so amend existing internal-tax and tariff laws as to reduce the annual revenues to be collected therefrom to the necessary wants of the Federal Government, and no more than it needs to pay its matured debts and discharge its obligations under the laws of Congress, without crippling or deranging any American industries or business interests connected with the subject of tariff taxation, or interfering with the just rights of American working people, intended to be secured to them by the incidental effects of revenue duties, to share in the joint product of the labor and capital employed in American mining and manufacturing industries to the full measure of the difference in the cost of their labor and the labor of those engaged in similar industries in Europe.

Resolved, 2, That the Senate will concur in no joint resolution for the final adjournment of the present session of Congress until after the passage of such remedial laws as are specified in the foregoing resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama moves that the Senate now proceed to consideration of this resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HALE. What is the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

Mr. TELLER. Has it been printed?

Mr. PUGH. I ask the consideration of the resolution at this time to enable me to address the Senate upon the subject. I do not desire any action at this time upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator from Alabama consent to let it lie on the table for a while, as there is other morning business to come in ahead of it?

Mr. PUGH. I have no objection to that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over for the present.

GOVERNMENT POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

Mr. SAWYER. I wish to call up the motion that I made the other day to reconsider the resolution appointing a special committee on the Government postal-telegraph system.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the motion submitted by him on a former day to reconsider the vote of the Senate by which the resolution was adopted, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. BUTLER December 12, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, be directed to inquire into the advisability and practicability of establishing and maintaining a Government postal telegraph, with power to report by bill or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. SAWYER. If the motion to reconsider is carried, I shall then ask to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin his object in moving a reconsideration?

Mr. SAWYER. The object is to refer the resolution to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I will repeat to my friend what I said the other day, that the resolution proposes to take this business from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. In the Forty-eighth Congress that committee had power to send for persons and papers, and spent four months in considering this very subject, and they reported a bill to the Forty-eighth Congress. They likewise reported one to the Forty-ninth Congress. We did not report a bill that some gentlemen wanted; but because a committee does not report just such a bill as the member introducing it wishes, it seems to me that to take the subject away from the committee would be treading on very dangerous ground.

Mr. BUTLER. I have nothing to do with that question. I have simply asked for this select committee, and unless the Senator can give some better reason than that already stated why this subject should go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, I must submit to his candor——

Mr. SAWYER. I asked to have it go there.

Mr. BUTLER. I say, unless some better reason can be suggested than that which the Senator has just stated——

Mr. SAWYER. It is immaterial to me what you do with it.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator has just stated that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have had jurisdiction of this subject for four years. It seems to me that this body might very properly plead the statute of limitations upon that committee, and ask that the subject be referred to a special committee.

Mr. SAWYER. We reported a bill every time. The committee is not to blame, but the Senate is to blame if final action was not taken.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not blaming anybody. I am simply throwing out, by way of suggestion, the remark that it seems to me the Senate might properly plead the statute of limitations upon the Post-Office Committee and get some other body, whether a select committee or some other committee, I am not prepared to say, to investigate and report upon this subject in such a way that the Senate can act upon it.

I care very little about this matter one way or the other, and I think it due to myself to state that the resolution was suggested to me by another. I am delighted to know that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have evinced such a wonderful zeal on this subject; and unless my friend, for whom I have great respect, on account of his ability and character and amiability, can assign some better reason than the one he has already given, I submit that this question should go to a select committee.

Mr. SAWYER. I can not see any reason why it should be taken from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I think they are competent to deal with it, and they will report a bill back in some form.

Mr. BUTLER. I have such great regard for my friend that I feel myself constrained to consent that so far as I am concerned the vote may be reconsidered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I was not present last week when the motion which it is now proposed to reconsider was made, or I certainly should have opposed the adoption of any such resolution. I have no objection to constituting a select committee to consider any question which does not from its nature and character belong to some of the standing committees of this body. If this were a new question and had never been before the Senate heretofore I should not oppose the resolution, but there is not a member of this body who does not know that naturally, from its character and nature, the subject should go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, unless——

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator be kind enough to explain why?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Because it is a provision for the fast transmission of the mails.

Mr. BUTLER. Not of the mails, Mr. President.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Not of the present mails, but of communications between people of one section and another.

Now, sir, this is not a new question; it has been here before; and until the present session no member of this body ever thought of constituting or raising a special committee for the purpose of taking cognizance of the subject of postal telegraphy. The question has been here for six years. It has been considered, as the Senator from Wisconsin says, by the Post-Office Committee. If that committee had been incapable of dealing with the subject, or if it had been remiss in its attention to the subject, then it might be proper in the judgment of the Senate to take it away from that committee. But I trust the Senator from South Carolina will not impute any such infirmity to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads as to render it incapable of dealing with this subject.

We have considered the question for six years, and I say, as a member of the committee, that no subject which has ever been before that committee has received as much consideration as this very question of postal telegraphy. The committee made investigation, and a bill was introduced some six years ago. I do not know that there was any report made upon that bill; but two years afterwards there was a lengthy report, and a bill was reported to the Senate after thorough investigation of the subject. Senator Hill, of Colorado, was then chairman of the committee. The bill was placed upon the Calendar. Subsequently a bill was introduced by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. We had the benefit of an able argument in favor of that bill by the Senator from Vermont. We considered it carefully, and reported another bill. So, the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has not been remiss in its attention to the business assigned to it by the Senate.

I say that it would be a vote of a want of confidence either in the ability or the willingness of that committee in dealing with this question for the Senate to take the subject away from it. I hope that no injustice will be done to that committee, or to any other standing committee of this body, but I should regard it as an act of great injustice, unjustifiable in every aspect of the case, unwarranted by anything connected with the treatment of the question by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. As a member of that committee I can not stand by and willingly see it divested of the jurisdiction and control of a subject which from its very nature and character belongs to that committee.

Mr. BUTLER. I had not the slightest idea of exciting all this criticism from my distinguished friend from Delaware. I can assure him nothing was further from my purpose than to reflect in the remotest degree upon that young, vigorous, and active committee of this body; and now that two distinguished gentlemen who have very pronounced ideas upon the subject of prohibition, and who are fresh from the fields of a contest upon that subject, have been added to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, I have no doubt we shall have very prompt action.

I desire to say that nothing was further from my intention than to reflect in the remotest degree upon my distinguished friend from Delaware or any of his colleagues on that committee, and I now, for the second time, withdraw all opposition to a reconsideration of the vote by which the resolution was passed, and trust that it will go with all the bills now introduced, or which may hereafter be introduced, and all resolutions, petitions, memorials, and arguments, to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the motion to reconsider will be considered as agreed to, and the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Whereas the Congress of the United States passed an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1887, and the Attorney-General has construed the said act to give right and power to any railroad company to make claim to any and all public lands of the United States within the primary or indemnity limits of any grant, and to sell the same and by such sale to give a title to the purchaser, whether Congress has authorized or forbidden the same by any previous act, and without regard to the rights and claims of actual settlers; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Interior has authorized by an executive order all railroad grants to be adjusted on this basis (under this opinion of the Attorney-General); and

Whereas the application of this principle as law, namely, that a false claim of title to land with notice in the laws that the claim of title is without foundation will make a title in the purchaser, is contrary to reason and all reasonable principles of construction that have prevailed heretofore in all systems of law; and

Whereas under this opinion and the order of the Secretary of the Interior the vast land grants heretofore made to corporations may be increased to twice the quantity given in the granting acts, by making a fraudulent claim of title and selling the same: Therefore, it is

Resolved by the Senate, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to report without delay a bill repealing said act; and further, it is the sense of the Senate that no greater quantity of the public lands, and no other land than that given in the original acts granting the same, shall be approved to any railroad company, or corporation, or State; and that all acts of the Interior Department donating the public domain to individuals, or corporations, or States, without the authority of an act of Congress, are void and should be so declared by act of Congress; and the Committee on the Judiciary are hereby instructed to bring in a bill to this effect, with the further provision that patents from the United States to tracts of land not exceeding 160 acres to one person shall be granted from the United States to all actual settlers on the public lands of the United States within the primary or indemnity limits of any railroad grant who have improved and are actually cultivating these lands; also, to the purchasers of town sites to the extent of 640 acres, where they have bought the lands on which they are living from the railroad company or alleged grantee, with the further provision that nothing in the act shall be construed as a confirmation of the right or title of the railroad company to any of the lands to which patents shall issue under this act.

Mr. CALL. I ask that the resolution be printed, and that it lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and lie over, if no objection be interposed.

MRS. NANCY GARDEN.

Mr. DOLPH submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Mrs. Nancy Garden, sister of James Brown, deceased, late a messenger of the Senate, the sum of $720, being an amount equal to six months' salary as messenger aforesaid; and said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 2) authorizing and directing the payment of the salaries of the officers and employés of Congress for the month of December, 1887, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution from the House of Representatives; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, December 22, 1887, they stand adjourned until Wednesday, January 4, 1888.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to proceed to the consideration of the President's message, simply for the purpose of entering a motion to refer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the annual message of the President of the United States, which lies on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that that message, with the accompanying documents, be referred to the Committee on Finance. I desire that the question be not taken to-day, but give notice that at as early a day as may be convenient after the holidays I shall address the Senate on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the message, with the accompanying documents, be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion will lie over.

Mr. COCKRELL. In connection with the motion of the Senator from Ohio, I inquire whether any order for the printing of the message has been made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An order to print has been made.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is simply the ordinary motion to refer, and on that motion after the holidays I propose to make some remarks. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] has a resolution pending on the same subject, on which he desires to speak, and wishes to proceed to-day, I understand.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 3) giving one month's pay to certain employés of the House of Representatives; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REGENT OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appoints Hon. RANDALL LEE GIBSON, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, to serve upon the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, under the provisions of the Revised Statutes relating to that Institution, in the place of Samuel Bell Maxey, of Texas, whose term of office has expired.

REVISION OF THE REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. PUGH. I desire now to call up the resolutions I submitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Alabama to-day will be regarded as before the Senate, if no objection be interposed.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, the most distinguished writers on political economy, and statesmen of the greatest ability and experience, and merchants, manufacturers, and business men of all countries, have devoted much time to the study, comprehension, explanation, and practical application of the principles and policies that underlie, and should govern, the far-reaching question of tariff taxation and international trade relations, and the effect of such principles and policies upon industrial pursuits of every kind, and after all such trials and experience the question still confronts us, and all other enlightened countries, with as many complications as ever heretofore confounded politicians, and troubled parties, and challenged the ability and experience of lawmakers.

In the United States a century of trial and experience finds us where we were at the beginning, divided in opinion and unable to agree how Congress shall exercise the power granted in the Constitution, "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises."

I make these preliminary statements of admitted truths to ask the question, if it is not about time for all of us to conclude that the problem of tariff taxation and revenue legislation is incapable of permanent solution and settlement, for the reason that the subject in its nature changes like the laws of production and the conditions and relations of peoples and countries engaged in trade and commerce among themselves, which had always been governed by local as well as general interests? Every government must have the power to levy and collect taxes, but there is no reason or justification for such power, except the necessity for revenue to pay the legitimate and proper expenses of the government. If the real character of any power of the Congress of the United States could be defined and limited by plain words it is the power of taxation. The power to lay the tax, duty, impost, and excise is inseparably connected with the power to collect. Congress has no power to levy a tax that is not to be collected. A duty levied to prevent collection is destructive of the power of taxation, and necessarily unconstitutional. A necessary element or quality of a duty on imposts is, that it shall produce revenue to be collected. The Supreme Court of the United States has so decided, and no other definition of the character and extent of the power of taxation has ever been made by any court. But the source of all the division and contention is the scope and objects and effects of the duty to be observed and considered by Congress when the power to levy duties on imports is exercised.

The duty, in amount and application, is certainly under the control of Congress. What imports Congress will select to be taxed and what imports shall go on the free-list, and how much each shall be taxed, must be conceded to be within the discretionary power of Congress. There are over four thousand articles now imported that are taxed, and several hundred articles imported are now on the free-list. Why has Congress always discriminated between articles imported so as to make some free and some taxable? Why has Congress always discriminated between the articles imported that have been selected for taxation, so as to make some articles produce more and some less revenue? In all this discrimination did not Congress look to other objects to be effected by the duty than the raising of revenue? But this question of the power of Congress to levy and collect duties on imports for revenue only, or for revenue primarily with the intentional and desirable incident of incidental protection to manufacturing industries in the United States, is too well settled to require discussion. The National Democratic party, as an organized party, has always claimed and demanded that the power of Congress to raise revenue should be exercised for the public objects described in the constitutional grant itself, which are "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." While employing all the forces and obligations of its organization to confine the taxing power of Congress within the revenue limit, that party has endeavored, by just discrimination and fair adjustment of the duties in amount and application, to distribute, as equally as practicable, the burdens of necessary taxation among those best able to carry and justly chargeable with the burden, and, at the same time, by the same discrimination and application and adjustment of revenue duties, within the sacred constitutional boundary, secure, as an intentional and desirable incident, as much relief, aid, or benefit from the incidental effects of the revenue duty, so intended, as will protect American miners and manufacturers to the full extent of the difference in the cost of labor in the United States and foreign countries—this being the full measure of protection claimed by the manufacturers themselves, and much more than they have shared with their laborers, for whose sole benefit the protection was asked of Congress.

The question of the power of Congress to foster and encourage manufacturing industries in the United States was fully discussed in the First Congress, of which many framers of the Constitution were members. The first division of parties on the question of fostering, encouraging, and protecting American manufacturers against foreign competition was not on the wisdom or necessity for such power to exist, or the wisdom or necessity that it should be exercised for such purpose, but the contest resolved itself into what it was then, and has been ever since, and is to-day, and that is, to what extent has Congress the power to afford encouragement and protection to American manufacturing industries against the competition of older and like industries in Europe? The Democratic, then called the Republican, party contended that the only power Congress had to afford such protection and encouragement to American manufacturing was in the just and reasonable exercise of the power of taxation for revenue by wise discrimination and adjustment in the tariff schedule. The Federal party, now the Republican party, contended that the power of Congress to afford such protection was derived from the power to "regulate commerce with foreign nations." The line was then plainly drawn between the two national parties, as conclusively shown by their debates, as to whether protection to our manufactures was an incident of tariff laws enacted for revenue, or whether such protection was the principal or primary object and effect of a law to "regulate commerce with foreign nations." The materiality of the difference between the two parties as to the source and character of the power of Congress to protect American manufacturers is found in the fact that if protection is a result secured by the exercise of the power of taxation, as I have stated, then such protection must follow as an incident of the tariff laws enacted principally to raise revenue; whereas if the power to protect is a power to "regulate commerce," it follows necessarily that the law to regulate can prohibit importations, and thereby secure to American manufacturers an absolute and exclusive monopoly of the American market. This contention between the two national parties was protracted through many years, and was characterized by the most extraordinary ability, until 1830, when the Democratic doctrine was defined and crystallized in the second annual message of Andrew Jackson to Congress in these words:

> The power to impose duties on imports originally belonged to the several States. The right to adjust those duties with a view to the encouragement of domestic branches of industry is so completely identical with that power that it is difficult to suppose the existence of the one without the other. The States have delegated their whole authority over imports to the General Government, without limitation or restriction, saving the very inconsiderable reservation relating to their inspection laws. This authority having thus entirely passed from the States, the right to exercise it for the purpose of protection does not exist in them; and consequently, if it be not possessed by the General Government, it must be extinct. Our political system would thus present the anomaly of a people stripped of the right to foster their own industry and to counteract the most selfish and destructive policy which might be adopted by foreign nations. This surely can not be the case; this indispensable power, thus surrendered by the States, must be within the scope of the authority expressly delegated to Congress. In this conclusion I am confirmed as well by the opinions of Presidents Washington, Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe, who have each repeatedly recommended the exercise of this right under the Constitution, as by the uniform practice of Congress, the continued acquiescence of the States, and the general understanding of the people.

The same declaration, in substance, was made of Democratic doctrine by President Polk in his inaugural address, in the following language:

> I have heretofore declared to my fellow-citizens that in my judgment it is the duty of the Government to extend, as far as may be practicable to do so, by its revenue laws and all other means within its power, fair and just protection to all the great interests of the whole Union, embracing agriculture, manufactures, the mechanic arts, commerce, and navigation. I have also declared my opinion to be in favor of a tariff for revenue, and that in adjusting the details of such a tariff I have sanctioned such moderate discriminating duties as would produce the amount of revenue needed and at the same time afford reasonable incidental protection to our home industry, and that I was opposed to a tariff for protection merely, and not for revenue.

In the Presidential campaign of 1840 protection was advocated for the first time on the distinctive ground that American labor should be protected from the competition of less highly paid foreign labor. The pauper-labor argument appeared full fledged in the tariff debates of 1842, and since then it has remained the chief consideration impressed on the popular mind in connection with the tariff.

We come now to the last authoritative declaration of Democratic principles and policy on the subject of external and internal taxation. The Democratic platform of 1884 was the production of the most conservative, patient, and patriotic consideration. It shows upon its face the most deliberate purpose to avoid extremes. The manifest intention was not to commit the party to the opinions or purposes of any faction in its organization. Protection regardless of revenue and free trade regardless of protection, were the Scylla and the Charybdis to be avoided. The patriotic effort of the convention was to define, as clearly as it could be done by human language, the boundaries of a common ground upon which all who call themselves Democrats could meet and work together in harmony. What is that common ground? I quote the words of the platform:

1. All taxation shall be limited to the requirements of economical government.

2. From the foundation of this Government taxes collected at the custom-house have been the chief source of Federal revenue. Such they must continue to be.

3. Sufficient revenue to pay all the expenses of the Federal Government, economically administered, including pensions, interest and principal of the public debt, can be got under our present system of taxation from custom-house taxes on fewer imported articles, bearing heaviest on articles of luxury and bearing lightest on articles of necessity.

4. Unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation.

5. The Democracy pledges itself to reduce taxation to the lowest limit consistent with due regard to the preservation of the faith of the nation to its creditors and pensioners.

In carrying out these public pledges, and in discharging these public duties in relation to tariff legislation in the shape of amendatory and original laws, how was the taxing power of Congress to be exercised? The platform answers:

Knowing full well that legislation affecting the operations of the people should be cautious and conservative in method, not in advance of public opinion, but responsive to its demands, the Democratic party is pledged to revive the tariff in a spirit of fairness to all interests. But in making reduction in taxes, it is not proposed to injure any domestic industries, but rather to promote their healthy growth.

6. Many industries have come to rely upon legislation for successful continuance, so that any change of law must be at every step regardful of the labor and capital thus involved. The necessary reduction in taxation can and must be effected without depriving American labor of the ability to compete successfully with foreign labor, and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may exist in consequence of the higher rate of wages prevailing in this country.

7. Subject to the preceding limitations we demand that Federal taxation shall be exclusively for public purposes, and shall not exceed the needs of the Government economically administered.

Can truths be made plainer by human language than those stated by me in the commencement of my remarks, that the principles and policy of the Democratic party as defined by President Jackson in 1830, and President Polk in 1845, and by the National Democratic Convention of 1884, are essentially and identically the same, namely:

That it has claimed and demanded that the taxing power of Congress should be exercised to raise revenue for the public objects described in the Constitution in immediate connection with the taxing power, that it has employed all its forces and obligations to confine the taxing power within the revenue limit, and inside of that constitutional boundary has endeavored to so adjust and now proposes to so adjust the duties in amount and in their application to the imports selected for taxation as to distribute, as equally as practicable, the burdens of taxation among those best able to carry them, and at the same time by just discrimination and adjustment, within the sacred boundary, to secure, as an intentional and desirable incident, all the protection needed by American workingmen against the competition of cheaper foreign labor.

How can any reasonable and honest man be deceived or misled as to what is the doctrine of the Democratic party, and what are its duties and obligations publicly assumed in the face of the American people? Who is reckless enough to say that it is truthful, honest, and fair to make the charge that the Democratic party has ever favored or given any support to free trade, except to the extent of the free-list in all tariff laws?

How can trade be free in any article or commodity upon which any duty is levied? If every duty levied on imports was imposed for "revenue only," who can deny that such a duty would be more or less protective of every article manufactured in this country upon which the duty was levied? There can be no free trade in any article except those on the free-list, and the only test of whether a man or a party is for free trade is what articles they wish placed on the free-list. As to the articles put upon the free-list by the vote, support, or influence of representatives, individuals, or parties, they are to that extent for free trade. The existing tariff law expressly authorizes free trade in many hundred articles enumerated in the free-list, amounting in value to the value of nearly half our imports.

Then, again, we hear Democrats calling each other in derision "free-traders," "tariff reformers," and "protectionists."

Most of the confusion, crimination, and recrimination in the discussion of the question of tariff taxation is caused by utter ignorance, or willful misrepresentation to deceive or mislead the people. It surprises me to hear any Democrat admit that he stands on the Democratic platform of 1884, on which Mr. Cleveland was elected, and at the same time deny that he is a protectionist, or deny that he is in favor of a tariff law enacted primarily to raise necessary revenue, and so adjusted in the amount of the duty and in the selection of the article imported upon which the duty is levied, as to afford, as an intentional and desirable incident, all the protection that our manufacturers really need against foreign competition.

To illustrate the plain meaning of the Democratic platform—

1. Say the Government needs $220,000,000 to be collected from duties on imports.

2. The list of imported articles from which the $220,000,000 must be raised is to be agreed upon by both Houses of Congress.

3. Each article in the taxable list of imports should be made to produce no more than its share of the $220,000,000 of revenue.

These three propositions are plain and simple and sound. Then where is all the difficulty in the way of an agreement by every member of the Democratic party who desires harmony as a public good? On the first proposition, as to the amount of revenue to be raised from duties on imports, Democrats differ. Some Democrats insist that all the revenue the Government requires shall be raised exclusively from duties on importations. They insist upon repealing all excise duties or internal-revenue duties on liquors and tobacco, and collecting all revenue from importations.

On this proposition I have quoted the language of the Democratic platform, namely:

From the foundation of this Government taxes collected at the custom-house have been the chief source of Federal revenue. Such they must continue to be. Sufficient revenue to pay all the expenses of the Federal Government, economically administered, including pensions, interest, and principal of the public debt, can be got under our present system of taxation from custom-house taxes on fewer imported articles, bearing heaviest on articles of luxury and bearing lightest on articles of necessity.

It is manifest from the above recitals that it can be made no test of Democracy or of fidelity to Democratic organization whether you are for or against repealing the internal-revenue laws in whole or in part. With both national parties it seems to be a question about which States and Congressional districts differ, as they do on all economic questions affecting special local or general interest.

The national Democratic party in its last convention solemnly resolved that

From the foundation of this Government taxes collected at the custom-house have been the chief source of Federal revenue, and must so continue to be.

This language is an unmistakable admission that some portion, but not the chief part, of Federal revenue may be raised by internal-revenue duties.

Then follows in language equally clear another declaration, and that is—

That every dollar of revenue needed by the Federal Government for any and all purposes may be raised under our present system of taxation from custom-house taxes without any internal-revenue duties.

Then the simple question is, has the time arrived when the Government shall raise all the revenue it needs from taxes to be collected at custom-houses, or shall a portion of its revenue be collected by a tax on liquors and tobacco, or on whisky alone?

The tax on whisky and tobacco is levied exclusively for revenue. There is no protection, incidental or otherwise, from internal-revenue duties. It must be admitted that internal-revenue duties are extraordinary taxation, resorted to only to meet emergencies arising in Government. Direct taxation has never been attempted or sanctioned as a permanent part of our Federal revenue system. It is nothing but a simple business calculation, a purely economic question, whether we shall, in whole or in part, abandon at once all internal taxes and look alone to duties on imports as a source of Federal revenue.

It must be conceded that every dollar derived from internal taxes is now and will continue for some time to be needed to pay pensions and the interest on the public debt, both of which are obligations of the Government growing out of our late war. It can not be denied that existing duties on whisky and tobacco were levied to meet and discharge war obligations of the Government. Will Congress wipe out all internal-revenue duties and meet and discharge obligations growing out of the war from revenue raised alone by a tariff upon imports? Who asks that this shall be done, and why? Upon the question of repealing the duty on whisky I never had clearer or stronger convictions. In itself the tax is perfectly just and wholly unobjectionable, except that it is a direct tax, and there is nothing that is produced, owned, and consumed that can supply the Government with $90,000,000 of revenue with more propriety or less injury to any human being than whisky. I have never heard any valid reason, and I do not believe there is any valid reason, except that it is a direct tax and objectionable in the mode of collection, why whisky drinkers should be relieved from the payment of $90,000,000 of revenue for their voluntary luxury and that amount extorted from compulsory consumption of the necessaries of life by tariff taxation. I know of no better use that whisky can be made to serve than to carry $90,000,000 of necessary revenue to pay the pensions of soldiers and interest on the war debt, instead of drawing that amount from meritorious and harmless consumption of imported articles.

Who insists that the luxury of whisky drinking shall be made cheaper by being relieved from any of the burdens of Federal taxation? Is it the whisky drinkers or the whisky makers, or who is it that publicly declare there shall be no revision of the present tariff on imports until all internal-revenue duties are repealed? It is not the whisky drinkers or the whisky makers who compose the free-whisky advocates. This cry for free whisky, or no reduction of the present surplus revenue, comes loudest and fiercest from manufacturers and their representatives. Why is it that the most defiant and uncompromising advocates of free whisky are the manufacturers of protected articles? Is it on account of their opposition to direct taxation, or is it rather for the reason that, if the duties on whisky and tobacco are repealed, it will at once wipe out $120,000,000 of revenue and leave the Government to look alone to custom-house duties to raise all the revenue it needs? When the free-whisky advocates get the Government in the condition of being compelled to rely upon duties on imports then they are ready to revise the present tariff. Why are the manufacturers and their representatives, then, willing to revise the present tariff? Is it to stop the income of the surplus revenue? Not so. The surplus has been stopped by the repeal of the whisky and tobacco tax, and the Government finds itself short of the necessary amount to meet its obligations, and unable to raise the money it must have from custom-house taxation as now provided for without a change of duties on importations. Manufacturers and their representatives know that if $120,000,000 of revenue can be cut off by repealing the tax on whisky and tobacco, the present tariff must be revised and protective duties increased to enable the Government to supply its necessary wants. Some advocate of free whisky is doubtless ready to suggest that the necessary revenue may be raised by reducing the duties and thereby increasing importations. Would any advocate of free whisky favor a reduction of duties to increase importations?

Is it not remarkable that many who favor a repeal of the whisky tax at the same time advocate and vote for an increase of pensions to the amount of one hundred or more millions per annum? And some of these are Democratic members of Congress, who voted such an increase of pensions over President Cleveland's veto. Their proposition is to repeal the tax on whisky from which the Government derives about $90,000,000 of revenue, and at the same time increase the pension burden $100,000,000, more or less. Take away $90,000,000 of whisky revenue and add $100,000,000 of pension debt of the Government. Where is the additional revenue to come from if you strike down $120,000,000 of whisky and tobacco revenue? Can we increase duties on protected articles without decreasing importation? What articles are now imported that need protection upon which the duty can be raised to produce more revenue? Is any advocate of the repeal of the whisky tax in earnest when he says he favors an increase of importations to supply the American demand, and thereby raise the revenue that must be supplied to take the place of so much of the $120,000,000 of internal revenue that the Government will need if you repeal the whisky and tobacco tax? All I ask is that we shall deal frankly and honestly with each other, and settle this question fairly. It is natural that manufacturers should take care of their own interests. I would vote for no duty on any article manufactured in the United States that would cripple any home industry or impair the ability of home competition with foreign labor and capital. Then let us meet on that common ground found in the Democratic platform. Repeal the tax on tobacco, which I will agree to as a general compromise for the sole reason that it is an agricultural product, and let the tax on whisky stand for future consideration.

On the second and third propositions in relation to the list of imported articles from which the other necessary revenue should be raised, and as to the share of the aggregate amount of revenue each imported article should be made to produce, my views will be given in the general line of the balance of my remarks. In this connection I desire to direct attention to the inquiry:

How stands the Republican party to-day on the power of Congress to protect American industries against cheaper foreign labor and capital, and as to how it should hereafter be exercised? I venture the statement that since 1830 to the present time no political party as an organization opposed to the national Democratic party has claimed or attempted to exercise the power of Congress to protect American manufactures against foreign competition, as a power to "regulate commerce with foreign nations." I venture to declare that the Republican party of to-day, as a party organization, derives the power to protect from the power to tax imports, and not from the power to prohibit importations, as a regulation of foreign commerce. I challenge any representative man of the Republican party to declare that his party claims the power to protect or has exercised such power except as a power to levy duties upon imports. If I am correct in this statement, then I make the charge that the Republican party has persistently transcended the limits of the taxing power and grossly abused the intent and purpose of its delegation to Congress by the States by levying duties upon imports that were never intended to raise any revenue, but were imposed for the express purpose of preventing the importation of the articles so taxed, and thereby to secure to the American manufacturer, without any check upon his greed from foreign competition, an absolute control of the home market, so that he could and did dictate the price of his own fabrics to the American consumer, which is the very essence of monopoly. Mr. Calhoun characterized such use of the revenue power of the Government, as every honest man should characterize it, as "a violation of the Constitution by perversion, the most dangerous of all, because the most insidious and difficult to counteract."

Then, the important and difficult question arises, how shall this far-reaching taxing power of Congress be exercised? The answer to this question produces all our discussions, divisions, and troubles. We may agree on a definition of the power of Congress to levy tariff duties. Party platforms may be framed in language comprehensive enough in its meaning to secure harmony of opinion and co-operation in action on election day, but when the time comes, as it has now and here, to give practical expression and enforcement to these opinions and pledges, and to carry into execution the honest meaning of our platform by the revision and passage of tariff laws, then the conflict comes. What shall be the rate of duty, and how shall it be applied? Shall the duties on imports stand as they are? Our party platforms have answered these questions, as I have shown, in glittering and attractive generalities. The difficulties attending a wise, just, and honest settlement of these questions grow out of the fact that tariff laws in their operation and effect reach the pocket of every citizen and voter in the United States. And the pocket nerve connects the representative with the constituent and carries into Congress all the struggles and rivalries growing out of the varied industrial pursuits in the thirty-eight States and three hundred and twenty-five districts represented in Congress.

Human nature can never be raised high enough to give us the same views and respect for the rights and interests of other people that we have for our own, and if the light of truth and justice and equality under the laws of a common government is in reach of all of us who are charged with the obligations and duties of citizenship and representation and law-making, there are unfortunately too many who decline to be controlled in their action by any amount of such illumination. When Congress exercises the revenue power of taxation, many important considerations are involved, and a patriotic and statesmanlike discharge of the high duty of framing tariff laws require severy representative to understand the subject-matter of taxation, and how the interests and industries of American citizens are to be affected by tariff legislation in which they are interested. This tariff legislation opens a wide field for thoughtful, honest investigation and statesmanship; a field full of intricate and confounding complications, growing out of varied and conflicting interests and pursuits under the management of all sorts of opinion and judgment. The United States present, as we all know, more and greater advantages of soil and climate for agricultural pursuits, which employ three-fifths of our population, than any other country in the world. These States also contain more and better-located raw material than any other country for mining and manufacturing, in which one-fifth of our people are engaged. It must therefore be conceded that the three great producing classes—agriculturists, miners, and manufacturers—are furnished by nature with unlimited and inexhaustible raw material, and with all the means and agencies to insure constant supply of such raw material and employment of labor, common and skilled, and reasonable certainty of success of all industrial pursuits.

The fourth grand division of our population and of their industries is commercial, made up of the carriers and traders in everything the other three industries produce. Each of these industries is largely dependent upon the others for support and maintenance, and those who engage in them are meritorious and useful citizens. They all meet together in the market-places of the world, and engage in the never-ending struggle with each other for gain in their several pursuits. The farmer comes to market with his grain, meat, fruits, vegetables, fowls, eggs, milk, butter, cheese, sugar, sirup, cotton, wool, tobacco, hay, cattle, hogs, sheep, mules, and horses. The miner comes with all the varieties of minerals, ores, metals, and earth. And the manufacturer comes with all his products from cotton, wool, minerals, ores, metals, earth, wood, stone, marble, chemicals, and the many other materials and forms of manufacture. And here comes the common carrier with the means of transportation to the market-places.

When these classes meet on common ground they form into two other classes, buyers and sellers, and change again from buyers to sellers. These buyers and sellers are producers and consumers, or a mixture of both. The sole aim and governing motive of the individuals of each class who meet in the market-place is the promotion in the highest degree of self-interest. The market price decides everything, and the first and only inquiry of all classes is, how are market prices to be established and regulated? The struggle is to make and regulate prices, and those who engage in it are buyers and sellers. Sellers pull up, and buyers pull down. Bulls throw up, and bears tear down. Poor human nature is too weak and selfish to allow prices to be established and regulated by natural, just, and equal laws, without resorting to the questionable methods and practices in trade and commerce. Were it not for our selfishness and greed the first inquiry in determining the price of anything offered for sale in the market would be, what is the reasonable cost of the articles to those who offer them for sale?

When the cost to the producer, manufacturer, or seller is ascertained, the next question to decide is as to the profits. If the individual will of sellers or buyers were the only law to regulate prices, the former would demand the highest, and the latter would pay none but the lowest, prices. There is but one law that compels submission of our greed and selfishness, when all moral considerations fail, and that is the law of necessity. Nothing but our necessities can be relied upon to enforce obedience to the laws of supply and demand. If there is but little of anything to sell that is in demand, and that supply is necessary to satisfy our wants, the consumer suffers in the price exacted. If there is more produced than is necessary for our use, the producer and seller suffer. So that, at last, the most reliable protection all classes have against the exactions of each other is found in the unavoidable changes constantly occurring in their relations to each other as buyers and sellers. These changes from buyer to seller and from seller to buyer in the market-places and in the trade and commerce of the world constitute the great adjuster and equalizer of profits and losses.

The question of the effect of the duty on the price can not be answered correctly without looking to the articles selected for impost duties. If the articles taxed are manufactured in this country, as many of them are now, in sufficient quantity and quality to supply the American market, it is evident that home competition, if left free to act upon home manufacturers, will prevent the importer or home manufacturer from adding the duty to the price they ask in the American market. If the production of manufactured articles by American manufacturers is not equal in quantity and quality to the demand here, it is equally clear that the consumer must have his wants supplied by the importer or the American manufacturer of such articles at a price which includes the duty. It follows that when production at home is not equal to consumption at home tariff duties are most oppressive to the consumer. It must be admitted as an undeniable fact that when our manufacturing capacity was not able to supply our consumption of dutiable articles consumers had to pay to American manufacturers the most extortionate and ruinous prices, greatly beyond any necessity for their protection against foreign competition, and these manufacturers have thereby accumulated vast fortunes from the unnecessary and oppressive operation of tariff laws. No people ever submitted so long to such robbery under the authority of their own government.

The enormous profits of manufacturing protected articles secured to American manufacturers by too high tariff duties invited so much capital into manufacturing that production was increased beyond home demand and consumption, and this hot-bed growth sometimes glutted the American market and reduced prices of protected articles below the addition of the duty. Those engaged in manufacturing protected articles, instead of dividing their large incomes annually among stockholders and showing the people the real profits of their monopoly, enlarged their manufacturing capacity from part of the proceeds of their business until they turned out too much for American markets, and, in defiance of their power to prevent it by all sorts of shifts and combinations and trusts among themselves, they found the American market glutted and prices of protected articles reduced. This overproduction of protected articles and consequent reduction of prices caused by unreasonable, unjust, and oppressive tariff taxation that brought such enormous profits to manufacturers as to enable them to increase the growth of manufacturing and build up mountains of wealth is paraded as conclusive evidence of the wisdom of such a system of legislation.

What justification can now be found in any general or public policy, or public necessity, or the protection of laborers in mining and manufacturing, for continuing such tariff duties as must be admitted to be too high, or unnecessary, or unequal and unjust? It is conceded by all parties and factions and every member of Congress that the Federal Government is levying and collecting more revenue than it needs for any lawful purpose, and to the extent that the revenue collected exceeds the just wants of the Government it has been pronounced to be an unwarranted abuse of the taxing power properly characterized as "public robbery." Every member of Congress and every political party who obstructs a revision of existing tariff laws for the purpose of favoring manufacturing monopolies, at the risk of a financial panic and industrial paralysis, becomes a party to the robbery and a political criminal, and deserves political death.

The Republican and Democratic parties have promised to reduce the income of revenue to the wants of the Government, and it is trifling with the common sense of the people for Republicans to charge the blame of the failure to revise the tariff to the Democratic party.

This Congress can not adjourn until such a change is made in our revenue laws as will stop the flow of money from the people into the national Treasury beyond the needs of the Government. Let the excess be fifty, seventy-five, or a hundred millions, whatever it is, is the withdrawal of that much of the life-blood necessary to the health of all business interests and industrial pursuits. Manufacturers themselves are deeply interested in putting a stop to the drain of money from our currency circulation that is indispensable to their own trade in American markets. How can manufacturing and mining industries prosper when there is stringency in the supply of money produced by the withdrawal of millions every month from the channels of trade to be locked up in the Treasury?

First, then, shall any changes be made in the present free-list? In considering and acting on the free-list and the different schedules of dutiable articles I do not expect to get all I want. I recognize the character of the subjects of taxation. I expect human nature and personal interests and the bias of selfish consideration and ambitions to exert their influence, and I am willing to concede something to others and deal with this whole subject in the spirit of fair compromise to reach a fair adjustment.

Then, what shall be done with the free-list? I would increase it by putting there all chemicals and dye-stuffs used in manufacturing, and also raw wool of all low grades, and salt, and I may, in the general make-up, be willing to add other articles to secure necessary remedial legislation. It is simply impossible to please everybody, or to satisfy the natural cravings of human kind to claim more than they are entitled to, and to take all they can get without regard to the rights of other people.

Then let us endeavor, in the spirit of harmony and liberal concession, to enter upon the solution and adjustment, as far as practicable, of the vitally important and pressing question to the tax-paying people of the country, what reduction shall be made of the revenue derived from direct taxation? What imported articles now dutiable shall go on the free-list? And what shall be the rate of duty and how shall it be applied to the many articles imported? While we are engaged in the important and difficult work of improving our present revenue system it is necessary for us to remember and that the people should understand that the burdens of taxation are not to be measured alone by the amount of revenue collected and paid into the Treasury for the support of the Government.

It is manifest that the least part of the burdens of our present tariff laws has been and is the amount of money raised by tariff duties and actually appropriated to the support of the Government. This truth is made clear by the undeniable fact that the only revenue paid into the Treasury from tariff laws comes from the collections from the importers of duties on the articles imported. The importers pay into the Treasury every dollar that is collected from duties on importations. The amount, in round numbers, collected last year from importations was $212,000,000. Not less than that amount will be paid the present fiscal year by importers. Who has to carry this $212,000,000? Among whom is it distributed? The same answer can never be made to this question, for the plain reason that the truth is difficult to find, and the searchers for it announce their discoveries in accordance with their personal interests. If you say the duty is added in every case to the price of the article in the foreign market, many sales here will instantly be produced to disprove your statement.

It is certain the importer will reimburse himself unless some competing seller offers the same article at a less price. Whether the consumer or the importer pays the duty depends entirely on the supply of the article in the American market. If the American consumption of the article imported exceeds the American supply, the importer will be able to reimburse himself the full amount of the duty. If the home and foreign supplies are equal to the consumption, the importer may save the duty in the sale. But if the American stock of such goods, whether from importations or home manufacture, is in excess, more or less, of the consumption or demand, the competition between sellers will enable the buyer to have some choice and take some part with the sellers in making and regulating the price of such articles. In the latter case the consumer can protect himself in whole or in part against the payment of the duty. As a rule, with some exceptions, it can not be denied that the duty, in whole or in part, is added to the ultimate price and is paid by the consumer. In every instance where the duty on an imported article, in whole or in part, is added to the price in the American market it is for the plain reason that the supply and the consumption are equal, or nearly so, and there is no influential competition between sellers. In the absence of an overstock or full supply, and consequent competition among sellers, it is very certain that to the extent the duty enters into the price of the imported article will it be added to the price of all the like articles manufactured in this country or in Europe. In that condition of the supply and demand here the portion of the duty paid by the consumer to the importer for the foreign article will be added in the sale of the same or like article sold by the American manufacturer. When the amount consumed of American manufactures and the increase of the price of the same to the American consumer by tariff duties are ascertained, as I have stated, and the amount of consumption is multiplied by the increased price, we have the data for measuring the burdens of tariff taxation and accounting for the stupendous wealth of its beneficiaries. It is, therefore, false and misleading to assert, as is done every day, that the amount of revenue derived from tariff duties determines the full measure of the burdens of tariff taxation. The $212,000,000 demanded by the Government from duties on imports can be increased millions more for the alleged benefit of manufacturing industries by a skillful application, arrangement, and adjustment of the schedules and classifications and duties and machinery of a tariff system.

Tariff laws can be so framed as not to raise any more revenue than the Government needs, and yet abound in gross violations of the Constitution and unjust and oppressive provisions.

It must be conceded that American consumers are greatly interested in having the supply of what they consume equal to the demand, and hence they are, or should be, favorable to the encouragement of production of manufactured articles used by them, and it is in this manifestly sound proposition that strong support is found for such a judicious exercise of the power of taxation for revenue as will insure, as an intentional and desirable incident of revenue duties, reasonable and sufficient protection to American manufacturers against the advantage of cheaper labor enjoyed by the foreign manufacturer. Let us inquire, then, what is the difference in the cost of manufacturing labor in the United States and the competing manufacturing countries in Europe. It is simply impossible to answer this question accurately. All that can be ascertained is something near an average difference. It is certainly all the American manufacturer can ask to be conceded that the average cost of unskilled labor in Europe is 50 per cent. less and of skilled labor 100 per cent. less than in this country. There is a great amount of perfectly reliable evidence that in England spinners and weavers in cotton and woolen mills are better paid than they are in New England.

Robert Howard was examined under oath by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, of which I was a member, and he testified that he had been a spinner of cotton cloth at Fall River, Mass., for eleven years—and neither of the Senators from Massachusetts will question his credibility or the opportunities he has enjoyed of learning the facts to which he testifies; that he was then secretary of the labor association at Fall River, Mass., and was thoroughly acquainted with the condition of the working classes in New England and also in Old England; that he worked in England seventeen years as a mule spinner and a piecer for the mule spinner, and that his opinion of the condition of the workmen in that branch of industry relatively in the United States and in England is that the English spinner is in a far better condition. He would not speak for the weavers, but would for the spinners. In England they give a man a pair of mules, that is cotton-spinning frames, and an assistant to work between the mules with him, and also an assistant to work on the back of the mules, but in this country it is a peculiar fact that however large the mules may be, no matter how many spindles they may contain, the employers will not come to the same rules adopted in England. They insist on one man running the mule with only one little assistant to go behind it. There is one exception to that rule at the Amoskeag Mills, in Manchester, N. H. As the secretary of the Mule Spinners' Association he knew what the practice was in all the mills. Fall River is the Manchester of America, because of the whole production of print cloths in the United States that city produces three-fifths. In Oldham, England, they run 5,000,000 spindles, nearly one-half the whole number (11,000,000) run in the United States. In the report of Carroll D. Wright, for 1883, out of 190 mills in Massachusetts, 150 are tabulated, showing the value of the products to be $66,471,313, and the value of the raw material to be $35,009,108. This amount deducted from the value of the products would leave $31,462,205. The amount paid for wages of labor was $15,451,347, leaving a remainder of $16,010,858 for the employers. The amount paid for wages divided between 59,684 operatives in 150 mills would give $258.80 to each operative, big and little, or divided by 313 working days in the year would give 82 cents per day to each operative. Several gentlemen who have testified here have made the impression that $9 a week have been the average wages, and many laboring people complain and say that false impressions should be corrected.

Mr. Howard then gives the comparative wages paid spinners in England and America:

In England: At Ashton-under-Lyne, Blackburn, Stockport, and Hyde, for 28-inch cloth, 56 reed, 14 picks, 60 by 56, 58 yards long (that is the cut), 25 cents for manufacturing a cut of that description.

For 28-inch cloth, 60 reed, 16 picks, 64 by 64, 58 yards long, the average is 28½ cents a cut.

In America: At Providence, Fall River, and Lowell, for 28-inch cloth, 56 reed, 14 picks, 60 by 56, 58 yards to the cut:

For Providence, a cut similar to the English cloth pays 17½ cents.

For the whole State of Rhode Island, averaged 16¼ cents.

For Fall River, 20 cents per cut.

For Lowell, 20 cents per cut.

For 28-inch cloth, 60 reed, 15 picks, 64 by 64, 58 yards long, Providence pays 22½ cents per cut, Fall River 23½ cents per cut, Lowell 23½ cents per cut.

On the first description of goods 25 cents a cut is paid in England, while in America only 18¾ cents is paid. On the second class of goods England pays 28¾ cents per cut, and America pays only 23 cents for the same cloth.

The most that a spinner will do in England is to attend four looms. Sometimes American spinners will attend eight mules. A spinner in England will have two tenders to a long pair of spinning mules. In America the spinner has no help except one child. The looms are run faster here than in England, and turn out more cloth. In England the looms are run nine hours. In Massachusetts they work ten hours, and in Rhode Island and New Hampshire eleven hours

Now let us compare the facts stated under oath by Mr. Howard, who is as well informed and as worthy of credit as any man in New England. Politicians, newspapers, and members of Congress who represent manufacturing districts make the assertion that the operatives in Fall River, Lowell, and all over New England receive from manufacturers double pay for the same work that is done by English operatives. The way the statement is made which reaches the people is deceptive and misleading. The amount of wages earned in a day in New England is compared with the wages earned in a day in Old England, and when shown in that way is about double as much here as it is there. The truth is concealed from the people that the American and the English operatives are each paid by the piece or the cut, and that the American workman does nearly double the work in a day that is done by the English workman. The Englishman runs from two to four mules nine hours, and the American workman runs from six to eight mules ten and eleven hours. The fact is that the employer in New England gets nearly double the work and better work out of his operatives, and pays less according to quantity and quality of labor than the manufacturer in England. But the wages earned each day on account of the greater amount of work in New England sums up about twice what it is in Old England. This is true as to the manufacture of all cotton and woolen goods. But, to avoid all controversy, I will admit, not believing it to be true, that for skilled labor we pay 50 to 100 per cent. more for such labor employed in manufacturing in this country than is paid in England. And in France and Germany the difference is much greater. For labor that is the least skilled in manufacturing the difference is only about 50 per cent. between the two countries. I have made this liberal admission for the benefit of our manufacturers, without considering the question of the relative amount and value of wages in different countries so far as the workingman is concerned.

I desire now to call special attention to an important matter which has been overlooked in the adjustment of tariff duties, with a view to the protection of the labor employed in manufacturing in the United States.

The manufacturer's claim is for so much protection from tariff laws as will make up the difference in the cost of the labor employed here and in foreign countries in manufacturing industries. The Democratic party is pledged to secure that much protection in revising the present tariff laws. Will it be denied that a full compliance with this promise requires only that Congress shall ascertain what amount of difference is paid by the manufacturer for the labor he employs in making the article upon which the duty is asked to be levied? Then take each schedule of tariff duties and find what portion of the total cost of production was paid for labor in the place where the dutiable article is manufactured. When the amount paid the laborer for making the dutiable article where it is manufactured is ascertained, then find the amount of the difference paid by the manufacturer here and in foreign countries for such labor. The first question is, what amount of revenue is it right and necessary to collect from this article, as the share that ought to be charged to it in making up the aggregate amount of revenue needed by the Government? This question is to be decided by considering all the facts I have heretofore mentioned. Take, for illustration, cotton goods that enter into general consumption, and made out of cotton yarn, number fourteen and under, and with less than one hundred threads to the square inch. Shall any duty be levied on such goods? They are now taxed, if not bleached, dyed, or colored, 2½ cents per square yard, and if bleached, 3½ cents per square yard; and in addition thereto 40 per cent. ad valorem. It is an undisputed fact that the production of such goods, known as shirting, sheeting, and drilling by American manufacturers, is fully equal and more than equal to the entire consumption in this country; and that large annual shipments are made of these goods to foreign markets, where they sell at a profit against foreign competition. It is well known that no foreign country can compete, or undertakes to compete, with us in the manufacture and sale of such goods to supply the American market. How is it that American manufacturers of shirtings, sheetings, and drillings, are able to manufacture these goods with higher-priced labor and ship them abroad and sell them at a profit over the same kind of goods manufactured with so-called pauper labor in Europe? Tell me why the same thing can not be done in the manufacture and sale of woolen goods for every-day wear. Why can not the American manufacturer make and sell common woolen and cotton cloth at home without a tariff duty, as well as he can ship and sell cotton goods in Europe?

The answer is no doubt ready by manufacturers or their representatives, that it is the tariff in America that enables them to pay more for labor to make cotton goods cheaper and better here than it is done in Europe, and as to woolens it will be stated that the same thing can not be done, because wool is more than double the price here that it is in Europe. The consumer is asked to believe that high-priced labor makes low-priced goods out of cotton, but that the same better-paid labor can not make low-priced woolens to supply the home demand and ship to Europe, because wool is higher in America. If a protective tariff has made the American manufacturer strong enough to pay more for his labor, and make all the cotton goods to supply consumers in this country and ship 25 per cent. of their production to Europe for sale at a profit, how is it possible that putting shirtings, sheetings, and drillings on the free-list can harm the American manufacturer or his operatives? And what is it that makes wool higher in America? The manufacturer will answer, as the fact is, that it is the duty on wool and the cheaper labor employed in raising it abroad. The amount and cost of the labor in raising cotton in this country is ten times as much as the amount and cost of labor in raising wool, so that the difference in the cost of the labor here and abroad in raising wool deserves but little consideration, as it cuts a small figure in answering the question, why woolen goods for every-day wear can not be made in this country to supply the home market and to ship abroad without a protective duty, as well as cotton shirtings, sheetings, and drillings. The only reason why there is any difference in the ability of the American manufacturer to make common woolen goods as well as common cotton goods without a protective tariff is the duty on raw wool. Put wool or the cheaper grades of wool on the free-list, and there can be no valid reason, founded on protection of labor, why cotton and woolen goods, that are necessary for every-day wear and use, can not be put upon the free-list. As to common cotton cloth like shirting, sheeting, and drilling, the duty is wholly harmless, and need be repealed for no reason except that it produces no revenue.

I will now support my statements by the most reliable evidence taken under oath by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor.

William Mather testified before the committee: That he resided in Manchester, England, and was on a visit to this country to ascertain, on the authority of the Royal Commission on Technical Education, what are the opportunities offered to the people of this country to acquire industrial training and technical knowledge of the various occupations and industries that are followed here, and generally what opportunities are afforded for science teaching, the teaching of the elements of the sciences that underlie all the industry of this country, as they do of all countries; that he had been an employer of labor all his life; that the appointment of this royal commission to inquire into the technical education of all the countries in the world arose out of the fact that in England they had not many opportunities nor institutions which afford to the working population, or to the middle classes, the means of acquiring a knowledge of the sciences before they enter into the usual occupations of industrial life; that England has felt for the last ten years very acutely the competition which has sprung up in all parts of the world with her industries, and it has been supposed by some public men, and large numbers of the community generally, that English manufactures of the simplest kind would for the future have to yield to a higher class of production if they are to hold their place in the world as purveyors of clothing and the various articles which have hitherto been shipped from England; that the countries of Europe have ceased to take from England gray cloth and the simplest form of machinery, and have in a hundred ways ceased to need the services of England in matters for which twenty years ago they were absolutely dependent upon her. In consequence of this England finds it necessary to improve the taste in all articles she manufactures, and to bring to bear a higher knowledge of the scientific laws that underlie all the industries, and to educate her people into still greater skill—a skill derived from a higher intelligence; that in England the people have an idea that America excels in all the mechanic arts any other countries of the world; that her wonderful genius in the direction of original design—invention—and the excellence of her manufactures in regard to everything mechanical has attracted the attention for a number of years and made the people of England curious to know how it is that the people of America have arrived at such excellence and proficiency; that they had accounted for such superiority of American working classes from our universal system of education and the immense resources of our country, that had attracted intelligent men from all parts of the world to settle here, and their families had grown up and made intelligent and superior working people; that the industries of England had flourished chiefly hitherto upon the great demand which all the world has made for her products and the facility with which, owing to the abundance of material, they have manufactured all their machinery and textile goods; that during the last ten years that demand has very much decreased and England has now to pass on to a different kind of manufacture.

Mr. Mather further testified that he did not wish to say anything to intensify differences of opinion, but he would say that he believed all American working people have greater activity, greater nervous energy than English people have, and that the Americans do more work, and can do more work from that spirit of intense desire, which they have to accomplish something, to accomplish more, even day by day, than they have done before. This is in the spirit of the people. They work harder while at work, and nine hours count for more here than ten hours in England. That one of the difficulties arising here out of our development is, that we have artificially developed our industries, that we are going at a rate that is not natural, that we are forcing all around. That on the question of manufacturing in New England, the system we have adopted of protecting our textile industries, has, of course, enabled our manufacturers to get very large profits in a short time, and has attracted employers to invest, and it has at last developed a competition here greater than they have in England with all the world to compete with. That England is now right down on the ground. She is now thrown on the fact that she must produce a more artistic article in order to make herself felt in the future in the markets of the world. In America you have continued to make rapidly, which is not of the highest class; you have sacrificed everything to quantity, in order to make profits. All the vast capital from all parts of the country put into these textile fabrics enters into competition; at the same time wages remain as they were when you were doing a "roaring" trade. Manufacturers feel now that their capital is engaged collectively in a vast industry, very creditably conducted, very well managed, and with the strictest economy, except with palpable waste of raw material. In this country waste of raw material is the normal condition. You waste your forests, your metals, your food, and your drink; but in regard to manufacturing industries as a whole, they are conducted here with an intelligence and success that equals anything in any part of the world, but they have been built up on an artificial basis. The general competition has become intense, and when manufacturers say "We are not making high profits, we can prove we are not," the working people say "We are accustomed to a certain amount of wages and can not take less." There is a difficulty that can only be solved by much bitter experience on both sides. It is an artificial state of things that can only be solved by natural law.

The foregoing are the opinions of an English manufacturer of great ability and large experience, after three years' observation and study of American conditions and relations.

The next witness I will introduce is George C. Richardson, who testifies as follows:

I reside in Boston. I am selling agent, and have been for eighteen years, for mills in Lowell, Lawrence, Saco, and Lewiston. I sell cotton and wool manufactures. I am agent also of the Lowell Carpet Company. I am the exclusive selling agent for all the mills I represent. I sell every yard of goods they make. The York Manufacturing Company, at Saco, Me., was incorporated in 1822. Their dividends averaged over 12 per cent. for forty-seven years. They are making only irregular dividends now and sometimes pay none at all, but they have kept in operation. Their mills have been doubled within seven or eight years. So also with the Everett Mills. They have doubled their machinery. The profits upon the manufacture of colored goods have, as a rule, been larger than in the manufacture of common kinds of cotton goods.

But this last year there has been an unusual depression, from the fact that the accumulation has been so great on colored goods, and not only that, but the large dividends and earnings of the York Mills and the Amoskeag Mills have invited other machinery in other parts of the country to go on to their goods, and now there is too much machinery on colored goods, and it will take some time to bring back the true relations between production and consumption of colored goods. There is nothing like intelligence in manufacturing. It produces at a very much lower rate because it produces more. It reduces the cost of production. The labor of the ignorant help we import is at a lower rate on the pay-roll, but it does not earn nearly as much. One of the greatest advantages of our American manufacturers, as compared with other countries, is that the average intelligence of the laborer is of a higher grade. As a rule, skill is always intelligent.

To improve the general condition of the working people of this country the first thing I would do would be to equalize raw materials as compared with other countries and with the general tariff. We should improve the condition of our people if we had raw material, so that we could use it freely in manufacturing a great many kinds of goods we do not make now. But if raw material stands at too high a cost it is an impediment in the way of the laborer, and they do not have the field to operate in; whereas, if raw material were free, industry would become more diversified. I should supply it free of duty. I include as raw material wool, and all materials we call dye-stuffs—chemicals of all kinds. There was a large advance in the last tariff in that way.

The cotton interests say the woolen interests have been too highly protected with regard to raw material, but I am on both sides. I am a cotton manufacturer, although the cotton dominates with us. We have four mills that manufacture 30,000 bales of cotton each year. The last tariff discriminated unfavorably on a great many things. They retained the duty on wool, and reduced it on woolen goods, which the general public does not see, but a manufacturer feels it very quickly in running his machinery. But we have no fault to find in the cotton trade. We can get along. I do not know but what we could get along with free trade in the cotton business in this country if they would give us free raw material used in cotton manufactures. If it were not that cotton is combined with wool largely it would not be very much affected by a tariff one way or the other.

In dress goods cotton and wool are combined; it is cotton and wool or worsted and cotton. Take all our numbers of cotton yarn from below 14 (we export those very largely) and there is no duty; but when you come to our finer goods there is a duty. We do not feel it very much in our business. We are now exporting all the lower grades of goods. I recollect three years ago we exported about 64,000 bales of goods. The numbers under 14 represent the number of the yarn spun. Our mills make very few goods that are made of yarn over 9 or 10. There are ducks, such as No. 8, and they come down to Nos. 2 and 3. That is the size of the thread. Three or four years ago we exported 64,000 packages of these low-grade cotton goods, and to-day our mills export 23,000 bales. On all below Nos. 30 and 40 yarns the tariff is of very little consequence. The yarns run to 30 and 40. The Fall River mills make No. 30 goods. The Amoskeag mills make 22 or 23. The Amoskeag mills make largely of colored goods and export.

In former periods the tariff was of large consequence to the cotton-goods manufacture. Within my own experience I have seen cottons which were made in India on sale here in Boston. Education and intelligence in labor and in the use and application of machinery to labor enable us to make the goods and place them in the market as cheaply as they do in England and France, and under the protection heretofore afforded by the tariff we have been able to manufacture these goods in competition with England and France and thereby educate our laborers. We are better educated as manufacturers than we were thirty years ago, and the South will compete with us just in proportion to development in education.

There are a great many more difficulties in the woolen business than in the cotton. The wonderful skill by our foreign competitors in woolen manufacture, in using low grades of stock, in making handsome goods without any wool in them, is a serious drawback to American manufacturers. It is wonderful how in Yorkshire they will manage to work in jute and all the ordinary materials that are ever used in manufacturing and give the appearance of good woolen goods. They work up an article that has really very good wearing qualities. If they can produce goods that cost them 25 to 50 cents because of this skill, and we produce an article at more than double—say, 75 cents to $1—but which does not appear any better than theirs, although ours is worth a great deal more, that is one of the battles we have to fight. Our goods are better, but appearance is on the side of the English goods in woolens, but not in cottons. They can not work other material into cotton. We are all up with them in cottons. They can not cover up the raw material and put it out of sight, as they can in woolens.

But now, at this period, the power of the English manufacturer has been wiped out largely by our improved woolen machinery. We have gone ahead in machinery faster than they have in Europe. The laborers in England will not allow more than a certain portion of machinery to be used in their mills; they are very tenacious on that point; the laborers in England dictate the improved machinery that shall go into their mills. England has always used the tariff to protect her own labor. There is now a strong feeling of apprehension in Manchester, England, and in all the manufacturing districts of Europe that they may have to compete with the labor of America. In fact, it seems to be the only thing they fear. It disturbs them very much indeed. It is the labor element that has this apprehension, not the capital; capital can take care of itself.

Another witness examined under oath by the Senate committee was Thomas L. Livermore, who testified as follows:

I live in Manchester, N. H., and am agent and manager at this place of the Amoskeag Manufacturing Company. The company has on its pay-rolls usually from 5,500 to 6,000 people. The mills under my charge use about 40,000 bales of cotton per year, and manufacture between 55,000,000 and 60,000,000 yards of cloth, at a cost of between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000 per annum. The cloth we manufacture is mainly of yarn that has been dyed; it is ticking, denims, cheviots, awnings, and ginghams; we also make cotton flannels not dyed. The cost of the labor to make these goods is about 30 per cent. of the total cost of the goods. The people employed are of various nationalities; nearly one-third are Canadians, perhaps one-fourth Irish, one-fifth Yankees, and the remainder German, Scotch, and English.

The dividends of the company are ordinarily declared semi-annually; our regular dividend is 5 per cent. semi-annually, making 10 per cent. per annum. There have been during this time extra dividends, which have brought the total up to 14 per cent. per annum on the nominal capital stock of $3,000,000. This 14 per cent. includes a little profit on the sale of land on which this city is built, most of which was owned by the company; this profit amounts to about 2 per cent. The market for our goods is not confined exclusively to this country; we export to the hot latitudes in and about the Caribbean Sea and to some extent to Brazil; we export about 5 per cent. of the goods we manufacture, made up of what are called blue denims, such as make workmen's pants and women's dresses and aprons.

I have not any doubt that at the present time [September, 1883] the capacity of the manufacturing industries, say, of New England, exceeds the American demand. I only regard this as a temporary inequality in the supply and demand. The growth of population rapidly overtakes the increase in the number of spindles. We are now suffering from overproduction. The goods we export and ginghams, are those mainly produced in excess. When I say there is an overstock, I mean in the whole American market.

A cotton mill can be built in England at $12 per spindle or less, and the same mill in this country would cost perhaps from $14 to $16 per spindle. Sixteen dollars per spindle is the cheapest we can construct mills for in Manchester, N. H. That difference in the cost here and in England is due partly to the difference in material out of which the mill is built and equipped, and partly to the proximity of the coal and iron mines to the place where the mill is built. In this country, for the most part, the coal has to be mined by labor which is dearer, and then transported a long distance to where it has to be used. In England the mill is on one acre of ground and the coal mine in the next acre. I have had a manufacturer of ginghams in England to tell me that he got his coal delivered to him at his boiler for $2 a ton. It costs me over $6 a ton landed at my boilers.

Mr. PUGH. How would it be, as it is in Alabama, where the coal and iron and limestone and plenty of timber and raw cotton are all right there in sight?

Answer. Well, that being the case, as soon as the laboring population is equal to the demands of manufacture, Alabama would be among the most favored States. The general impression among manufacturers here is that American machinery, with some few exceptions, is better than English. It is more ingenious, better finished, and stronger and more capable of enduring wear and tear.

The 14 per cent. profit we realize on our nominal capital we get on the main part of the goods we manufacture altogether from the operation of the tariff. My impression is that the rate of duty on the kind of goods we manufacture is about 40 per cent., a duty which is greatly in excess of any profit we make. The competition on most of the small goods we make is so fierce, and the margin so small, that the tariff, in order to be of any use to us, must be practically prohibitive. I do not think it is worth while to make any "bones" about it. What we want is a prohibitory tariff.

Mr. PUGH. You do not conceal the fact that whatever protection you get comes out of those who consume your fabrics? That is a necessary result, is it not?

Answer. It is, I think, when you look at it in one aspect, but when you consider that most of the people who consume are the very people, for the most part, whose wages are enhanced by the profit, then, perhaps, their profit is greater than their loss.

The next witness examined was Gilbert B. Whitman, who testified as follows:

I am the agent and manager of the Amory Manufacturing Company, in Manchester, N. H. We manufacture cotton cloth and work about 800 hands. We make shirting, sheeting, and jeans, costing from 8 to 10 cents per yard, and 1 pound of cotton makes 3¼ yards of cloth, costing in labor to work up the pound 25 cents. That is about 1 cent per yard for the cost of the labor.

I commenced learning the business of manufacturing thirty-one years ago and have followed it ever since.

American manufacturers have not the least ground for fear of English manufacturers, except on the cost of labor. They are able to compete, except on account of the difference in the cost of labor. I think we are far in advance of English manufacturers in a great many lines of work.

Mr. PUGH. Now, then, you say all the advantage English manufacturers have over American is in the cost of labor. You pay for labor 1 cent per yard, and say the English pay only half a cent (which is too low an estimate), but put it at only half what you pay for labor and you offset that difference in the cost of labor by a half-cent difference in your favor in the cost of the raw cotton, and by another half-cent in the cost of the transportation of the English fabric to the American market. Are not our goods better, and are we not able to meet the English anywhere in the South American markets, and in Brazil, and in China, and you say you do ship to China?

Answer. Yes, sir; we send our surplus there.

The next witness examined was Charles D. McDuffie, who testified as follows:

I reside in Manchester, N. H., and am agent and manager of the Manchester Mills' manufacturing department. I began my life in the cotton mill at the age of seventeen years, and have worked in a cotton mill in every department. The Manchester Mills manufacture about 18,000,000 yards yearly of worsted dress goods, and about 13,000,000 yards of print cloths. We use about 8,000 bales of cotton a year, and about 3,500,000 pounds of wool, and employ about 2,650 hands.

We pay more for wool than they do in England and France. The wool that sells for 21 cents per pound there would cost us here 45 cents per pound. Wool in the grease at 45 cents per pound shrinks about 56 per cent., besides other waste in noils, and when clean and ready for manufacturing 1 pound of fine wool will make 4 yards of cloth. When clean, a pound of fine wool would cost us about $1.20. Wool purchased from sheep-raisers in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Ohio cost us that sum. We buy some wool in England, Montevideo, some in Boston, Cincinnati, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Louisville, and in Canada. The cost of woolen goods in France and England is doubled when sold in America. France takes possession of this market with gray woolen goods and drives out England. The best sheep's wool is raised in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Ohio. There is as fine wool and as good wool raised in these States as any I have ever seen.

Mr. PUGH. The styles of French woolens you speak of are classed as dress goods?

Answer. Yes, they are for dresses. They are the finest quality of worsted goods. If you were to double the duty on these goods, they would still be imported. The supply of woolen goods (not worsted, but such as all manufacturers make out of all sorts of wool) got beyond the demand.

This condition of things is produced by laws we can not control, and have always in the past been beyond the control of people.

Mr. PUGH. How much benefit do you get in the price of your protected articles from the tariff? I mean, how much profit do you make out of the tariff?

Answer. I do not know that I can answer that question directly, on account of the conditions it involves. The question of where we get protection to our textile industries comes entirely in the amount of labor in the protected piece of goods. If there is but little labor in the piece of goods, we do not need any protection; if there is much labor in it, it enters into a large part of the cost of a piece of goods. We then need protection, or we must stop making the goods. We need protection in that class of goods that require a greater amount of labor. And these are the finer fabrics in every case—the dress of the people which you may call luxuries.

Mr. PUGH. The duty could go on that class of goods and thus tax the consumers of dress goods, and there is where I have always said the duty ought to go. The man whose absolute and unavoidable necessities compel him to buy, and who can not avoid the burden of taxation, that is the man I want to relieve of that burden.

Witness continues:

There is not much difference in foreign and American wool. Australian wool will shrink about 52 to 56 per cent., and Montevideo wool about the same; Ohio, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania wool about the same. * * *

There is quite a difference in the English system as to fancy goods. They don't make goods as we do; they make you samples. You order upon the samples, and the manufacturer fills your order. They do not make and store goods for the market as we do. The English and French fill orders on samples. * * *

In my experience since 1848 the manufacturing capacity of New England has been enormous. For the last three years there has been very little. With the exception of little additions to the present corporations, I don't think capital will make any increase for years to come, because they all recognize the fact that it has to go South. * * *

We export a low grade of cotton goods. That is where labor represents the smallest factor in the cost of the goods. Wherever labor represents a large factor in the cost of goods we can not export them.

Every American witness whose testimony I have presented is a Republican in politics of life-long connection with and personal experience in the business of manufacturing cotton and woolen goods in New England. They have given their knowledge and experience under oath, and certainly the friends of protection can not deny that the full measure of protection required to make up the difference in the cost of labor in New England and in Old England and France, as shown by the evidence, would be abundantly afforded by two-thirds of the tariff rates on dress cotton and woolen goods, and that as to all cotton goods used in every-day wear it would not make the slighest difference in the market price of these goods if they were on the free-list.

It is a fact that ought to be admitted without question, that as to all cotton goods manufactured in this country out of yarn No. 14 and under, tariff duties or no tariff duties is a wholly immaterial question. Then as to dress goods made out of cotton, it is trifling with undeniable facts to claim that a purely revenue duty of one-third less than the present rate would afford ample protection to our manufacturers against cheaper foreign labor. But as to these cotton fabrics that are being used for dress and (except the very highest grades) manufactured in this country in quantity and quality to supply the American demand, the adjustment of tariff duties on cotton dress goods ought not to be the subject of serious contention or difficulty. Then, as to the woolen schedule, there is no more difficulty in the way of fair adjustment than there is in the cotton schedule, if we could agree on what shall be done with raw wool. This question could be settled at once, if it were not for the fear of the voting power of those wool-growers who demand high tariff duties. Some manufacturers of wool unite with wool-growers in keeping the present high duty on wool, because at least 40 per cent. of the duty on woolen goods is allowed them to compel the consumer to make up to the woolen manufacturer the higher price he has to pay for wool on account of the duty on raw wool. And should raw wool be put on the free-list because it is raw material, then every producer of any other raw material used in manufacturing will expect his raw material to go on the free-list, and while each class may believe that all raw material, except what they produce, should be made free of duty, yet the threat of retaliation in the work of revision and reduction of tariff rates drives all raw-material producers together in the determination to make common cause in the fight against any revision or reduction of present tariff taxation. There is no duty levied by the present tariff laws that is more unnecessary and oppressive to the working people of this country of all classes and conditions than the duty on raw wool and the consequent duties on woolen goods and clothing.

The amount of labor employed in raising wool is not 10 per cent. of the cost of production, and the claim for protection against cheaper foreign labor is utterly destitute of merit. Put it on the free-list and change the schedule of duties on woolen goods so as to put common woolen cloth and woolen clothing used for every-day wear by laboring people, and common blankets, on the free-list, and as to fine woolen goods used for dress, and fine blankets, let the duty be reduced in proportion to the reduction in the price of raw wool when it is on the free-list. For the sake of revenue, to make up for reductions thereof on account of lessening the duties on articles of necessity in common use, I would favor a duty on the higher grades of wool that are used in the manufacture of fine dress woolens; and such a revenue duty would afford sufficient encouragement to the raising of fine sheep in this country. Nearly all the wool we import is of the lower grades, in the growing of which it is impossible for the United States to compete with Australia and South America. We also import the finest wool, that is not produced in this country in sufficient quantity to supply the demand, and a revenue duty might be levied on the highest grades of wool that make dress goods, to encourage the raising of the finest sheep.

I have shown by well-established facts that the manufacturers of cotton and woolen goods in New England, where at least two-thirds of such goods are manufactured, can not suffer, and that their operatives will have the full measure of benefit intended to be secured to them, and all that is demanded by their employers for them from tariff taxation, in the revision of the present cotton and woolen schedules as I have indicated. Will the change I propose in the cotton and woolen schedules deprive Southern manufacturers of such goods of any protection from tariff duties that is really necessary to their growth and prosperity? I will not consume the time of the Senate in answering this question. But I refer those who deny the ability of the South to manufacture cotton and woolen goods without tariff protection or under the protection of a revenue tariff more profitably than New England to the testimony of William H. Young, president of the Eagle and Phœnix Mills, at Columbus, Ga. (volume 4, Report Senate Committee on Education and Labor, pages 508–524); also, testimony of John Rhodes Browne, president of the Columbus Manufacturing Company, Columbus, Ga. (same report, page 524); also, testimony of A. S. Matheson, superintendent of the Eagle and Phœnix Mills (same report, page 534); also, testimony of John Hill, engineer and machinist, Eagle and Phœnix Mills (same report, page 582); also, testimony of Charles H. Phinizy, president of the Augusta Factory, Georgia (same report, page 696); also, testimony of Charles Estes, president of the King Mill, Augusta, Ga. I am personally acquainted with each of the witnesses named above, and know them to be first-rate business men of the highest integrity and possessed of unusual practical sense and large experience in respect to the matters and subjects about which they testify.

The next schedule to which I invite attention is the "metal schedule." Shall this schedule be revised; and, if so, in what particulars? The first article is iron ore, taxed 75 cents per ton. Let us apply the considerations I have mentioned, as being proper to influence us in framing tariff laws, to this commodity. Iron ore is the foundation and hope of success of all the iron business in the world. The iron metal in the earth is almost as valuable and indispensable to mankind as gold and silver. The common labor of the world digs up and puts in market for the use of the world about thirty-five or forty millions of tons per annum, and of this quantity the United States now use about twelve millions of tons. Iron ore abounds in greater or less quantity in twenty-eight States of our Union, and there is enough in easy reach to be found on our lake shores and in several of the United States to supply all the demand for it in the world for a million of years. As a rule, where this ore is found the land has but little or no other value. Iron ore differs very greatly in value. The amount of iron found in a pound of earth may be one-half or more, and yet not be of much value. Everything depends upon the purity of the iron the pound of ore will yield. The test of purity is the freedom of the ore from sulphur and phosphorus. The presence of sulphur and phosphorus in the iron renders it too brittle and so impairs its tensile strength that it can not be converted into good steel. The demand for iron ore all over the world is for ore lowest in sulphur and phosphorus.

All the competition between the owners and producers of iron ore in this and all other countries is to supply the world's demand for ores that are pure enough to make steel, and especially steel rails for railroads. During the last ten years American energy has been greatly stimulated in the discovery of ores free from phosphorus. Vast quantities of such ores have been found on Lake Superior, and it is claimed that such ores have been, and can be, found in West Virginia, and in North Carolina, and in Tennessee, and in Alabama. It is very certain that enough of iron ore, sufficiently low in phosphorus to make good steel, can be found in the United States to supply the entire world's demand. It is also certain that iron ores of equally good quality are found, and no doubt in inexhaustible quantity, in Spain, Africa, Cuba, and Canada. These best ores, wherever found, are purchased by the manufacturers of pig-iron, to be converted into steel. These steel manufacturers, and especially those who make steel rails, are compelled to buy the ores freest from impurities.

The American manufacturers of pig-iron to convert into steel who have their furnaces near the Atlantic ports are the only importers of foreign iron ore. Those iron manufacturers who insist that ores shall go on the free-list base their claim on the ground that it is the raw material of every description of iron and steel, and for that reason these ores ought to be obtained at the lowest cost so as to cheapen manufactured articles to the consumer. On the other hand, those who own ore lands and those who dig out and supply ores to iron and steel manufacturers in this country claim that, as the theory and policy of incidental protection from revenue duties have support in the purpose of encouraging the development of American resources and the use of American productions, and of the labor so employed, it would amount to unjust and unequal discrimination to make pig-iron and all the other forms of manufactured iron and steel the subject of revenue duties and to leave out ores, upon which the whole iron and steel business is founded, to compete with the ores of foreign countries. There would be no contention upon the subject of making iron ores free, or taxable, if the American ores that are purest and freest from phosphorus were accessible alike and at the same cost to all the American manufacturers of steel. But unfortunately the iron ores that are lowest in phosphorus, and the best for that reason, are found only in sufficient quantity to supply the whole world in the Western and Southern States. The greatest quantity yet discovered is on Lake Superior. These lake ores have to be brought by water to Cleveland, Ohio, and other lake cities, and from there carried by railroad to eastern manufacturers of steel and steel rails. The steel makers in Cleveland get the American ore cheaper than steel makers in Philadelphia solely on account of the difference in the cost of transportation. If ores were on the free-list, eastern manufacturers of steel in Pennsylvania, and other States having Atlantic ports, believe that they could import their ores from the Mediterranean and Cuba at less cost of transportation, and also save the 75 cents per ton now paid as duty.

As a public question, what importance or benefit is there in putting iron ores on the free-list, or letting the present duty stand? If ores are made free will the price be reduced? Spanish and African ores can not now be imported to any American port for less than $5 per ton at the port of delivery. It is a mistake to suppose that Mediterranean ores are shipped here as ballast. It is a fact well established that the lowest average freight charge for iron ores shipped from Spain or Africa is 12s., or $3 per ton. From Cuba, Nova Scotia, or Canada the freight would cost less. But from whatever country the ores come the freight would cover nearly the whole cost. The question of making up the difference in the cost of the labor employed here and in foreign countries in digging the ore out of the ore-beds for delivery to purchasers really deserves but little consideration in deciding whether ores shall be free or not. The cost of the labor where American ores are delivered rarely exceeds 50 cents per ton, and certainly not over 75 cents, and if foreign ores were dug up and delivered for 10 cents per ton, or for nothing, how does the duty of 75 cents per ton benefit the American laborer? Does anybody suppose that the American laborer gets one cent more on account of the duty, or that he would get one cent less if ores were free? The labor cost of 50 or 75 cents per ton is a mere bagatelle, and iron manufacturers and ore owners know that they are the real parties to the contention, and that the laborers have no interest in the question whatever, except in the event that making ore free would lessen the consumption of American ores by the increased importation and supply of foreign ores, and thereby make the demand less for labor to deliver American ores. Then, is it reasonably certain that making foreign ores free of the duty of 75 cents or 50 cents per ton would increase their importation? If the importation were increased it would be for the sole reason that removing the duty had made the ore that much cheaper. Is it likely that foreign ore would be made that much cheaper, or any cheaper by putting it on the free-list? Will any increased demand for foreign ores and the increased demand for transportation from foreign countries make the ores or the transportation any cheaper than they are now under the duty?

Any supposed benefit American iron and steel manufacturers might get from free foreign ore would be very soon swallowed up by the increase of the cost of shipping foreign ores to American markets. I can not be made to believe that letting the duty stand or taking it off would produce any other effect than to reduce the revenue the amount now collected on iron ores. I have no idea that the imports would be any greater in twelve months on account of ore being free than they would be if ore were taxed as it is now. The cost of foreign or American iron ore will never be affected by more or less supply—it resolves itself into the cost of transportation. There is a superabundance of the best ores in the United States and in foreign countries, and no amount of demand here, or elsewhere, can ever fail for one moment to find the supply a thousand-fold greater than the demand. The only danger or ground for apprehension in the future of ore owners and iron and steel manufacturers that I can see in this country is, that the quantity and quality of iron ore and the natural facilities for iron and steel making are so wonderful and inexhaustible in the United States that capital will be invested in these industries to such an extent as to increase the production so rapidly that glutted American markets will soon force prices down to the bottom, where ore owners and iron and steel manufacturers must be satisfied with minimum profits or quit the business. There are two reasons which I consider sufficiently meritorious to influence my vote against putting iron ore on the free-list as compared with the reasons I have stated in favor of such a change.

First. If the iron and steel manufacturers at or near Atlantic ports, who want free ore because it would make ore cheaper to them, are correct in their belief, then it is very certain that all the iron and steel manufacturers in Pennsylvania, Maryland, New Jersey, and New York would supply themselves with foreign ores. And in Gulf ports, like Pensacola and Mobile, accessible by rail and water to Alabama coal fields, iron and steel manufacturers in those ports could establish their own lines of steamers to Cuba and get their entire supply of ores, and thereby put the owners of ore beds and the workers in North Alabama and in Cuba, and the manufacturers and workers of iron and steel out of Alabama ores in the interior cities and towns of Alabama, in fierce competition. If the Cuban ore could be obtained cheaper than Alabama ore in the interior, and the Cuban ores were found to be a better quality, the rivalry between Gulf furnaces and the furnaces in the interior of Alabama would soon reduce ore to a nominal price and seriously impair, if it did not destroy, the value of ore lands in Alabama. All the value they could have would be for mixing with Cuban ores. The retention of the duty of 75 cents per ton may not, and I do not believe it will, materially interfere with the chances or opportunities for such competition, but the removal of the duty would certainly be regarded by ore owners and ore workers in Alabama, and Georgia, and North Carolina, and Tennessee, and West Virginia, as an act of unjust discrimination against American and in favor of foreign ore.

Second. In my judgment it would be unwise, and result in no public benefit, to make iron ore free, and thereby produce alarm and discontent among American owners of ore beds and their workers, and make this subject one of constant irritation and contention in politics without any compensating public benefit.

The next article taxed in the metal schedule is pig-iron, on which there is a duty of $6.72 per ton. Pig-iron is a staple production in our trade and commerce in which our sixty millions of people are directly interested. The capacity of the State that I partly represent to produce pig-iron is equal, if not superior, to any in the Union, and in the present and future growth and prosperity of Alabama the two commodities that will contribute most largely to her greatness are cotton and pig-iron. Nature has blessed Alabama with inseparable and marvelous agricultural and mineral and manufacturing resources. Old England is powerful in her manufacturing capacity, and so is New England; but neither is able to increase its agricultural population or productions. In agricultural advantages and resources Alabama has no superior, and she challenges the world to equal her in the wonderful combination of raw material and natural advantages for mining and manufacturing. No State can have more to make in a hearty union and co-operation of agriculture and mining and manufacturing. Two-thirds of our cotton crop is exported, and one-third consumed in the United States. The price of cotton is fixed and regulated in Liverpool, England, without any influence of tariff or free-trade legislation. The superior quality of American cotton, and the abundance of the supply, secures a monopoly of the American market and insures its supremacy over other cotton-producing countries in foreign markets. It can not be denied that the cotton planter and food producer in Alabama would be benefited by encouraging and establishing mining and manufacturing of all kinds in Alabama, and so would other Southern States having the same facilities. It is a simple truth that the closer together producers and consumers live and carry on their pursuits the better for each of them.

If there is any profit in farming, and mining, and manufacturing, all these industries should be carried on together, where nature has supplied the means of making them successful and profitable. Why has Providence furnished in such abundance and in such close neighborhood the marvelous resources for farming and manufacturing as are found in Alabama, if they can not be worked and their fruits appropriated to the use of mankind, without contention, and rivalry, and antagonism? Then let the farmers, and miners, and manufacturers go together in harmonious and friendly co-operation in the great work of advancing Alabama to the front in all the elements that make a great State.

Great Britain is the most formidable rival of the United States in the production of pig-iron. The capacity of Great Britain to produce pig-iron does not extend beyond 8,000,000 tons, and she has the world's market open to her, which she largely supplies. She gets much of her ore from Spain and Africa. All the shipments of pig-iron to the United States amount to about a half million tons, mostly imported by American manufacturers of steel, who pay the duty to get pig-iron that is freer from impurities and better for making steel. The last fiscal year all the importations amounted to 418,919 tons. When pig-iron was $7 per ton duty more was then imported than is now under the present duty.

The present capacity of the pig-iron production of the United States is equal to about 7,000,000 tons, all of which is consumed in the United States. It is a small estimate to put the production of pig-iron in this country in five years from now at 10,000,000 tons. Will the consumption keep up with the production? Will American markets take all the pig-iron that will be made in the United States? If so, will it be taken at present prices? England has the world's markets open to her, and with a productive capacity at present equal to the United States she fails to find sale for all she makes, and what is left of her annual production she ships to American markets to get rid of her surplus and pays the duty of $6.72 per ton. How will it be when the United States leads England in production? Stated generally, the cost of pig-iron in Great Britain is about $12 per ton at the port of delivery, and on shipboard from $13.75 to $14 per ton, as shown by the Philadelphia Bulletin. Add the duty paid at the American port of $6.72 and you make the cost to the shipper in the American port of every ton of foreign pig-iron at least $20. Put the cost at the furnace at $7 per ton, and on shipboard at $10, and then you make the cost in the American port, after paying the duty, $16.72. The 418,919 tons of pig-iron imported the year ending June 30, 1887, according to the official report from the Bureau of Statistics, page 88, was valued at $6,528,795, which would be over $15 per ton, with the duty of $6.72 to be added.

Now, what is the cost of making pig-iron in Pennsylvania and Alabama? This question has been much discussed and iron-makers differ widely in their items and estimates of the cost per ton.

The following estimate was furnished, under oath, to the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, in November, 1883, by I. W. Sloss, president and owner of the Sloss furnaces, in Birmingham, Ala.:

|---|---|
| 2½ tons ore to each ton of pig-iron at $1.60 | $3.60 |
| 1.4 tons coke to each ton of pig-iron | 4.06 |
| ½ ton limestone | .30 |
| Fuel for boiler | .20 |
| Sand, water supplies | .30 |
| Repairs, taxes, and interest | 1.19 |
| Labor and salaries | 2.25 |
| Total cost | 11.90 |

I deny that the charges for repairs, taxes, interest, and salaries of officials, like the president of the company, are legitimate items of cost; but let them pass.

What is the cost of the labor necessarily employed to make a ton of pig-iron?

President Sloss answers:

|---|---|
| Labor cost in the 2½ tons of ore | $2.25 |
| Labor cost in the 1.4 tons coke | 2.13 |
| Labor cost in the one-third ton limestone | .17 |
| Labor cost in the fuel | .14 |
| Labor cost in the repairs and material | .77 |
| Labor of salaried men | 2.25 |
| Labor in total freights on stock to ton of ore | 1.00 |
| Total | 8.71 |

The items charged for repairs and materials for repairs, and the labor of salaried officers, and the labor for freight, are illegitimate and not properly included in the labor cost to make a ton of pig-iron to be considered in ascertaining what labor cost shall be made up by the duty.

Take the items of cost properly included in the above estimate, and the cost of a ton of pig-iron at Birmingham would be $4.69 for labor, and the other items of cost would be $3.28. But making the most liberal allowance for illegitimate items and it is a high estimate to put the whole cost at $10 per ton, and of this whole cost the allowance for labor can not exceed $5.

Now, what is the difference in the cost of the labor that makes imported pig-iron and the cost of the labor that makes Alabama or Pennsylvania pig-iron? That is to say, if the foreign labor costs but $2.50 per ton and the Alabama and Pennsylvania labor $5 per ton, the pledge of the Democratic party is to put a revenue duty on imported pig-iron that will make up the difference in the cost of labor in Europe and in the United States, and this is all that the pig-iron manufacturer claims. That makes the difference in the cost of the labor in Alabama and Pennsylvania and in Great Britain, to be made up by the duty, $2.50. But suppose the cost of labor in Alabama is $8 per ton, and in Great Britain $4 per ton, then the difference to be made up by the duty would be $4. It is trifling with truth and disregarding facts too well known to be disputed to deny that $5 per ton duty will afford the amplest protection to the manufacturers of pig-iron in the United States. It is useless to make the inconsiderate and utterly unfounded assertion that $5 per ton duty will not afford them more than sufficient protection.

In point of fact, I consider the difference in the duty of $6.72 and $5 as so unimportant in its effects on our revenue and as a protection to the pig-iron industry that it is not worth contention or serious consideration. My remarks on the subject of iron ore and pig-iron are intended to show how utterly groundless the apprehension is that these industries are in the slightest danger from any revision or reduction of tariff duties.

But the trouble is that all classes who are personally interested in the mining or manufacturing of anything that has a duty on it, which can be, in whole or in part, added to the price against the imported article of like kind, combine and form organizations called trusts, to limit production, to carry out the common purpose founded solely on personal interest to resist any reduction of the duty on the article they manufacture or any interference with the existing tariff. "Let the tariff stand," is the cry of every one who makes money out of it. The pig-iron makers and iron and steel makers in Alabama and Pennsylvania and in every other State ring their fire-bells and try to alarm the whole country if you propose to touch the duty on raw wool or any other protected article. You may not say a word about interfering with any duty in the iron or metal schedule, but nevertheless, in accordance with the combination founded in trust and confidence among themselves to promote individual interests, the pig-iron maker and the wool-grower and all the beneficiaries of high duties join in the cry of "Free-traders!" and "Free-traders' war on great American industries to paralyze and destroy business interests and starve poor laborers." In 1883, when the tariff was revised on the report of the Tariff Commission, a convention composed of 138 delegates, who represented the iron and steel makers, assembled at Cresson, Pa., and a committee of pig-iron makers reported to the convention that it was impossible for industry to survive a rate of duty below $9 per ton. All the furnace fires would be put out and darkness cover the mineral region if the duty on pig-iron was less than $9. But the convention did not heed the cry, and reported that $8 per ton would afford sufficient protection. When Congress was so reckless of the fate of our pig-iron industries as to put the duty at $6.72, what was the consequence? The importation of pig-iron was much less than when the duty was $7, and pig-iron makers have never been more prosperous than during the last four years.

It will not be believed that the profits of pig-iron making under proper management have been less than 25 per cent. There is plenty of reliable evidence that the profit at present prices is not less than 50 per cent., while farming has not paid 8 per cent. When the iron-maker is selling his iron at a price that yields him at least three times as much profit as the farmer makes, and the iron-maker claims that he is indebted to the tariff for his profits, who expects him to agree to any revision of the tariff, or any reduction of duties? It is perfectly natural that all those who are making money, or think they are making money, out of the tariff, should prefer to let it stand. It is expecting too much of human nature to ask those who have enriched themselves out of high duties to agree to a reduction. But those who are not sharing these unreasonable profits, but paying them as consumers of protected articles, are in a different condition, and occupy a standpoint from which they can take a different view. The farmer tells the iron and steel maker that he is willing and anxious that he shall succeed and prosper, so as to make iron and steel manufacturing great industries that will develop the mineral resources of the country sufficiently to supply the home demand and be able to export to foreign markets. But, my friends, you must not be too greedy. Be satisfied with a reasonable profit. It is the farmer's right to buy what he wants where he can get it cheapest. The manufacturer claims and exercises the right to get his labor where he can hire it cheapest. But the farmer says, while he has the right to buy what he wants anywhere he can get it cheapest, yet he is willing, in order to encourage home production of what he consumes and build up a market for his products nearest his home, to so levy revenue duties in amount and application as to enable the home manufacturer to live long and prosper in his business. But when the manufacturer abuses this concession of the consumer, and combines with the beneficiaries of oppressive taxation to prevent any returning benefit to the consumer from home competition, which he was told would certainly come if he would submit for a season to high tariffs to encourage home manufacturers, it is bad faith and unjust treatment to which consumers can not be expected to submit.

There are many articles in the metal schedule that are overtaxed and could stand reductions of duties—such as steel rails, plate-glass, and wire for fencing. Most of the revenue from the metal schedule comes from steel rails, plate-glass, and wire fencing, and these, and many other articles, might be reduced with great saving to consumers in price, if lower duties failed to reduce the revenue.

President Cleveland has had the courage and patriotism never exhibited before by any other public man in his position and with his surroundings to come out in an open field and tell the truth, as he understands it, so that there can be no mistake about what he means and what he believes to be the paramount duty of Congress. His last annual message was a great surprise to Congress and the country. For the last quarter of a century the immediate beneficiaries of our present tariff system have had full sway, and they had well-grounded confidence in their ability to hold their fort, and being intrenched behind their money power, and press power, and brain power, they never dreamed that any national party, or any public man who aspired to be President, and certainly no Chief Magistrate who was the acknowledged head of his party and its accepted candidate for re-election, would dare plant himself in full view of their fortifications, and in close range of all their guns, and invite them to give a patient hearing and reasonable and patriotic consideration to what he felt it to be his public duty to communicate and recommend to Congress in relation to a matter of pressing and far-reaching importance to them and the whole country.

There is not a single sentence in the message that is not the whole truth and nothing but the truth. That is my opinion. But there are members of my party who refuse to say the message is faultless. As the President truly states, we are confronted by a "condition" of public affairs that is a serious menace to the general welfare. The longer continuance of this condition must increase its perils, and the application and enforcement of all our theories must not be urged as indispensable concessions to secure co-operation in affording relief to the country. In this emergency President Cleveland has discharged his duty nobly. His message is invaluable in its other public effects and consequences. It will elevate public opinion and political thought, and teach the young men of the country a valuable lesson. It had become the habit of politicians and the practice of parties to treat politics as a game, and public office as a prize to be won or lost, and, without regard to means or agencies to promote and establish sound principles, the highest test of public worth and excellence was success. The people never fail to come to the support of a public servant who is bold enough to declare his honest convictions. Strong convictions are founded in a strong common sense of right and wrong, and when supported by unflinching courage they never fail to command the admiration and confidence of the people. Some men possess extraordinary ability and learning, but however gifted they may be in uncommon sense the wires are always down between them and the people. That man is the greatest statesman who by his opinions and his acts gives expression and enforcement to the common sense of the people he represents. The common sense of the people makes up public opinion and is the only safeguard of our republican government.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement of expenditures from the appropriations for the contingent expenses of the military establishment for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887; which was ordered to be printed, and laid on the table.

BRIDGES OVER THE MUSKINGUM RIVER, OHIO.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HATCH, until January 5, 1888.

To Mr. STEELE, until after the holiday recess.

To Mr. GLOVER, until after the holiday recess, on account of important business.

To Mr. MCCLAMMY, for four days from and after to-day, on account of important business.

To Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, until after the holiday recess, on account of important business.

COMPILATION OF QUESTIONS OF ORDER.

Mr. COX. I offer for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That for the purpose of completing the compilation of questions of order raised and decided on general appropriation and revenue bills heretofore ordered by the House so as to include the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses, the Speaker is authorized to employ a clerk to perform such work, who shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, such compensation as may be fixed by the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. Let it be again read.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman from New York to allow that proposition to go to the Committee on Rules. We are not at present sufficiently acquainted with its effect.

Mr. COX. I shall make a very brief statement and I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw any objection. There was authority given for work done by one of the clerks of this House in making a compilation in relation to all questions of order coming up on revenue and appropriation bills. There was an appropriation to pay for this service in the last deficiency bill, which failed. I should like to see a compilation of all questions of order as to revenue and appropriation bills, not only made in the House but made in the Committee of the Whole, and decided, so that we may guide ourselves properly as to the effect of our rules; and the sooner this is done the better for intelligent action on the part of the House of Representatives.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand perfectly well the object of this resolution, but I do not think it provides proper restraints as to the expenditure. I would like to know exactly the time to be employed in bringing up the work to which reference is made and the compensation to be awarded. We should know the limit of time and the limit of amount as well. I think if the resolution goes to the Committee on Rules it will be examined and we shall be able to secure the exact restrictions required.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] may amend the resolution, if he chooses, by stating that the work shall be done, say, within three months. I believe it will be completed within that time.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want to impair the efficiency or the thoroughness of the work; and I am not sufficiently informed to know by what date it should be completed or what amount should be paid for it. That is the reason why I wanted it to go to the committee for thorough examination.

Mr. COX. As the Committee on Rules will likely report the resolution back on an early day, I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules.

MEMBER SWORN.

Mr. RYAN, a Representative-elect from Kansas, appeared and qualified by taking the prescribed oath.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I understand the unfinished business to-day is the resolution which came over from the last sitting, which I introduced, in reference to the introduction of bills. As I understand the Committee on Rules will soon be announced, I ask unanimous consent that my resolution lie over for the present.

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON RULES.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the Committee on Rules, as follows: The Speaker, Mr. RANDALL of Pennsylvania, Mr. MILLS of Texas, Mr. REED of Maine, and Mr. CANNON of Illinois.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. RYAN. I offer the privileged resolution which I send to the desk, and ask to have it referred to the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Rule XXIV be amended by adding to clause 1 the following: "Provided, That there shall only be printed for the use of the House and Senate, unless otherwise ordered, 100 copies of each bill and resolution of a private nature and 500 copies of each bill and resolution of a public nature."

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

Mr. DIBBLE. I offer for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the reports of the Court of Claims under the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801," approved January 20, 1885, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, when appointed, with instructions to report to this House all such claims as have been decided favorably to the claimants and so reported by the Court of Claims in the general deficiency bill for the consideration of the House.

Mr. DIBBLE. Under the legislation adopted by Congress in 1885 all questions of law and fact connected with the French spoliation claims were referred to the Court of Claims, to be reported back by that court to this House for its consideration and action.

There have been reported to the present House the decisions of the court in relation to thirty-five ships. Thirty of those decisions are favorable and five adverse. The amount which the Court of Claims has decided as being due by the United States to the claimants in those cases is about $448,000. The object of this resolution is simply to have, in a convenient form for consideration by the House, these claims, which in the report are all set forth separately, with the decisions and the reasons therefor, in order that they may be intelligently considered, with a sufficient interval of time between now and the reporting of the deficiency bill to give every member of the House an opportunity for full examination of each and every claim. This being the course which other reports of the Court of Claims usually take, I presume, Mr. Speaker, that it will give better opportunity for examination and greater liberty of debate than any other, and unless some gentleman wishes to discuss the matter I will ask for the present consideration of the resolution, and upon that will call the previous question.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. DIBBLE. Does the gentleman desire to discuss this matter?

Mr. MILLS. I do.

Mr. DIBBLE. How much time does the gentleman require?

Mr. MILLS. Only two or three minutes.

Mr. DIBBLE. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of great importance. The House is not informed as to the amount of money embraced in these claims. We know nothing about it, and we are asked to take up the consideration of this question and act upon it without any investigation by a committee of the House, without any recommendation from a committee. In my judgment, it is a matter of too much importance to be acted upon here until it has been investigated and reported upon by a committee, and when the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] gets through with the discussion of the subject I shall propose to refer the resolution to a committee.

Mr. DIBBLE. That is the motion.

Mr. MILLS. I understood the gentleman to ask for its present consideration.

Mr. DIBBLE. No, sir. The resolution refers the matter to the Committee on Appropriations, to be reported in the deficiency bill, and then considered by the House.

Mr. MILLS. Well, we do not want it referred with instructions. We want it referred without instructions.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. DIBBLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLOUNT. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution goes further than my friend from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] claims. It is not simply a proposition to refer the subject. It directs the reference of these claims to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report them in an appropriation bill, and it gives that instruction before that committee have had a chance to examine the claims.

Mr. DIBBLE. Not at all.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] does not propose that, I think.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand that the matter is to be reported to the House on a deficiency bill, and is to come to the House with all the moral effect of such a report.

Mr. RANDALL. My idea is that this matter should first have the judgment of the Committee on Claims as to the propriety of its enactment before it goes to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is discussing one aspect of the subject and I am discussing another. This resolution amounts to a resolution of instruction to the Committee on Appropriations to report in one of the general appropriation bills all these claims that have been reported on by the court, just as judgments are reported; and if that is done they will come back into this House with all the moral force that attends a report of any bill by the Committee on Appropriations. It seems to me that that should not be done; especially in view of the fact that when the bill referring these claims to the Court of Claims was before the House the inducement for its passage was the statement that the action of the court was not to be final, but that the claims were subsequently to be passed upon by the House.

Mr. SHAW. Will the gentleman from Georgia permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. SHAW. Does not this resolution call for the reference of only such claims as have been adjudicated by the Court of Claims?

Mr. BLOUNT. I think it does; but, as I have just stated, the objection to the resolution is that it amounts to a declaration on the part of this House that the investigation as to that class of claims is concluded; whereas it is well known that when the bill referring these cases to the court was before the House it was stated, and accepted on every side, that the action of the court was not to be final, but that the court was simply to report the questions of fact and law to this House, to be reviewed by the House, and the judgment of the court to be confirmed or not, just as the House saw fit to determine.

It was expressly precluded that this question was to be treated as my friend from South Carolina proposes to treat it to-day. This is a new matter coming in here in the way that I have stated; and it does seem to me proper that it should be referred under these circumstances to some committee, as it may involve the expenditure not merely of $400,000, but of twenty, thirty, or possibly forty million. No man can undertake to say what the aggregate may be; and I submit that now in the initiative, we ought, in good faith under the promises made when the act for the consideration of these claims by the Court of Claims was passed, to provide for a reference to some committee, whether the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Claims, or any other committee, so that this question may have full consideration. We should not by the adoption of a resolution in this form commit the judgment of the House at this time.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Several messages, in writing, from the President of the United States, were communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

The House resumed the consideration of the resolution offered by Mr. DIBBLE.

Mr. DIBBLE. I will call my friend's attention to the fact that that resolution provides for a reference of these claims to the Committee on Appropriations, who shall report them back in a bill for the consideration of the House. By the adoption of this resolution the House will not be bound to any particular action in finally disposing of these claims.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, this proposition is to put these claims on the same footing with any measure reported by a committee for the consideration of the House; and I do not see why we should require the committee to report these particular items in that way. It is proposed that we treat these special claims as of higher rank than provisions for the maintenance of the Army or the Navy, the consular and diplomatic service, or any other branch of the Government. The gentleman proposes to require that these claims shall be reported for consideration.

Mr. DIBBLE. It is proposed merely that these claims be treated in exactly the same manner as other reports which come from the Court of Claims; that provision for every claimant be inserted as a separate item, with the amount thereof, in the appropriation bill. Here is a report from the Court of Claims detailing the proceedings in each case—the facts found after a regular judicial investigation before a court the judges of which are appointed by the Government. After the Government has been heard by its duly authorized representatives, this court submits a report with all the facts found, and giving every conclusion of law with the reasons therefor; so that, on any particular case, each member of the House—not merely the lawyers of the House—can form an intelligent opinion. It is proposed simply that these claims be reported in the general deficiency appropriation bill, which comes in towards the close of the session. Meanwhile, any member of the House who feels an interest in the subject may take this report of the court, may sift the cases, and when the general deficiency bill comes up can discuss each or all of these cases on general principles or with reference to details.

The history of these claims is that they have heretofore been fully considered repeatedly by Committees on Claims of this House; they have been passed upon by committees of both Houses ever since the year 1802; and since 1826, when the evidence was first transmitted to Congress, there has never been made, either to the Senate or to the House, an unfavorable report as to the justice of these claims. There are over forty favorable reports, sanctioned by the greatest names in American statesmanship and jurisprudence. From the early reports, the second of which was made by Francis Marion, of South Carolina, down to the latter reports, dignified by the names of Rufus Choate and Daniel Webster, there has been one consensus of opinion in favor of the justice of these claims. They have been before this House in its discussions, and the ultimate conclusion of Congress was that the merits of every claim should be judicially ascertained. This has been done as to thirty-five of these cases, which are embraced in this report. As to five ships the report is adverse; as to thirty, favorable. The amount found due by the court in these thirty-five cases is only $445,000, an average of about $14,000 to each ship.

This resolution does not present these claims to the House now for the purpose of taking any snap judgment of this body. The object is to insure, when this House gets to its rush of business, that certainty of final consideration and action, be it favorable or adverse, which, under the rules of this House, we are not apt to get with measures of this kind in any other way.

One word, Mr. Speaker, in regard to the probable amount of these claims in the aggregate. It has been variously estimated from $9,000,000 up to $30,000,000. I have carefully considered the statistics of these cases, representing all classes of vessels—schooners, brigs, and ships. I take these thirty-five cases to be a fair sample of all. In view of the average of the recoveries against the Government in these cases, and the fact that the time limited by statute has expired and no more claims can now be presented, it is my judgment that the aggregate, instead of being $20,000,000 or $30,000,000, will not, at the most, exceed $14,000,000. If we adopt the average in these thirty-five cases, the amount will be $10,000,000. Taking this basis of calculation, the amount of these claims will be much less than the opponents of their payment have stated.

Mr. Speaker, the amount of the claims involved in this resolution is, as I have said, only $448,000. But, sir, if the Government owes these claimants this money, the question of amount is a secondary one. The Government of the United States is able to pay its debts; the Government does pay its debts; and these particular claims have been favorably acted on by nearly every Congress during the last forty years.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say——

Mr. REED rose.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] wishes to speak, I will give way for the present. [A pause.]

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, if no further debate is desired, I will move the previous question.

Mr. BLOUNT. If I am required to go on now, I will do so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] will proceed.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, this is an exceptional proposition, such a one as I have never known to be made in this House before. It is a resolution directing the Committee on Appropriations of this House, charged by the House with considering all the items proper for governmental expenditures, to abandon for the time being as to these particular claims any revision of them—to direct the clerk of that committee to insert in the deficiency bill a provision for the payment of certain claims reported from the Court of Claims. I say, sir, it is without precedent.

My friend has referred to other cases coming from the Court of Claims which have gone to the Committee on Appropriations. Sometimes they have gone to them and sometimes to the Committee on Claims; but I undertake to say never before has the House withdrawn from that Committee on Appropriations the power to revise those claims; never before have claims coming from the Committee on Claims failed to be examined by the Committee on Appropriations; and never before has that Committee on Appropriations failed to exercise the right to say whether they should go into the appropriation bill or not.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman yield to me in order that I may call attention to the law on this subject?

Mr. BLOUNT. With pleasure.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the section of the law covering the subject may be read. It is section 6 of the act approved January 20, 1885; and after the law has been read I desire to call attention to the precedents under similar laws.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That on the first Monday of December in each year the court shall report to Congress, for final action, the facts found by it, and its conclusions in all cases which it has disposed of and not previously reported. Such finding and report of the court shall be taken to be merely advisory as to the law and facts found, and shall not conclude either the claimant or Congress; and all claims not finally presented to said court within the period of two years limited by this act shall be forever barred, and nothing in this act shall be construed as committing the United States to the payment of any such claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. The uniform practice with regard to the findings of the Court of Claims prior to the passage of the law making the judgment of that court final was that the report made to Congress upon the facts and conclusions of law should be referred to the proper Committee on Claims. The same practice has prevailed under the Bowman act; the facts as found by the Court of Claims are reported to Congress and then go to the proper Committee on Claims. There is no instance, I think, in our history where the Court of Claims has been required to ascertain the facts in reference to claims referred to it that the report made did not go to one or other committees of this House for consideration.

Mr. BLOUNT rose.

Mr. DIBBLE. I believe I still retain the floor.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understood that I was occupying the floor in my own right, and yielded to the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from South Carolina to demand the previous question.

Mr. DIBBLE. I yielded to the gentleman from Georgia, out of my time, of course, to hear what he had to say, and I am now willing to yield to him whatever time he may desire.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not recollect absolutely, Mr. Speaker, as to whether the statement of my friend from Indiana is correct or not, that this class of claims has always gone to the Committee on Claims. I am inclined to think sometimes they have gone to the Committee on Appropriations, but never with instructions requiring that committee to report them back in an appropriation bill, never taking from that committee the right, the revisionary right over such matters as have been referred to them by the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman permit me to make a further remark?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Where a court has been required by law to find the facts and report its conclusions to Congress the report has uniformly gone to one or the other committees of the House. Such claims so reported have uniformly been considered as still claims to be considered by Congress. The court in all such cases simply furnishes information to Congress on which to base legislation.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will not say absolutely, as the gentleman from Indiana has had large experience, and his statement will go for whatever it is worth, and it is worth a good deal, and it is not important to me what committee it should go to; but I do insist whenever any of these claims shall go to the Committee on Appropriations that committee shall be permitted to do with them as with other matters referred to them for consideration and action, and that they shall not be required to put them in an appropriation bill to be reported to the House. I do not see why their standing as claims should have any superior right; I do not see why they should be allowed any superiority over any other class of claims, for these are not judgments, as I understand it, but are simply advisory in their character, and I can not see any principle upon which we should require the Committee on Appropriations to include their payment in an appropriation bill without the examination and revision which are given to every other matter referred to them.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does not the gentleman from Georgia believe that this matter has already been put off long enough? Does he not know that it has been put off from time to time for eighty years, and is not that a sufficient delay? Let me ask him if he does not believe, further, that if his motion prevails it will be put off for eighty years longer before it comes up for consideration?

Mr. BLOUNT. Ah! that is what the gentleman means, then, by his resolution. You have waited a long time, and you mean to declare by your resolution that it shall be put off no longer. We are not going to consider it, but we are going to compel the Committee on Appropriations, without reference to the rules of the House or the merits of the question, to fasten the claims on an appropriation bill, and drive them through the House without consideration.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Oh, no; we are going to consider them; that is all we ask.

Mr. BLOUNT. You are going to consider them! How? On a deficiency bill. The law and facts in perhaps thirty or forty cases will be before you, and you will give, possibly, five minutes consideration to each one, which will, after all, be a mere perfunctory performance, because you declare on the floor of the House and in your resolution that you are tired of waiting.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is not eighty years long enough to wait?

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman need not be afraid there will be no consideration. We will all be there when the question comes up, and I suppose the gentleman from Georgia will be there.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am sure my friend will be there.

Now, my friend from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] declares that these claims have been considered and approved in some forty-odd reports, and by some of the most eminent men in the country. I concede that the principle upon which the claims rest has been reported by various committees.

It is likewise true that it has had vetoes from two distinguished Presidents of the United States. I do not care to inquire into the fact as to whether these Presidents or the gentlemen making these reports from the committees were correct. I am only dealing with the question now presented.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman state the ground of the last veto? If he will state the ground on which that veto was based I think he will come to the conclusion that there is no force whatever in his present argument or position.

Mr. BLOUNT. I can not state a veto message in the short time allowed me. I do not think it important, however, as to whether these gentlemen were right and the President wrong, or otherwise. The principle is one thing. We have cases now here—the facts and the law in individual cases—to be considered after simply a recommendation from that court, and the resolution means nothing else, practically, except to bring up these claims, not for consideration and adjudication, but for payment on an appropriation bill.

Mr. DIBBLE. Did I understand the gentleman from Georgia to say that he was favorable to the payment of some of these claims, and the principle involved in them?

Mr. BLOUNT. Oh, no; I made no such statement.

Mr. DIBBLE. Very well; I only wanted to know where the gentleman stands.

Mr. BLOUNT. Ah, that is it. You are simply feeling about.

Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing to acquiesce in legislative enactments touching this matter, though I did not vote for the measure originally. I am willing to treat the principle as accepted by the country, but I am not willing to force upon this House in this manner without consideration the payment of these claims.

Mr. DIBBLE. Then what objection has the gentleman, if he treats the principle as accepted by Congressional and judicial action—what objection has he that these cases should be taken up together in detail and acted upon in a deficiency bill? It is the experience of the older members of this House that on frequent occasions exceptions have been taken to even final judgments of the Court of Claims. Members now on this floor know that in many cases individual judgments of the Court of Claims are criticised and in some instances stricken from the deficiency bills; and I reassert, sir, that there is nothing here to commit the House to favorable or unfavorable action, but it is a proposition simply to put these cases in a shape where the House can take them up in detail in a bill that the Committee on Claims could not report in this shape; and, if it did, would not have the floor for its consideration. That being the case, the general deficiency bill is the only proper one for such action.

Mr. BLOUNT. I presume the gentleman did not intend to take me from the floor.

Mr. DIBBLE. By no means. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, we have plenty of time. I do not want to occupy very much more, however.

Mr. MILLS. Let me ask the gentleman from South Carolina if he would not consent to so modify his motion as to have these claims referred to the Committee on Claims with instructions to report back as soon as possible such recommendations as they think proper; and then when you get them up before the House they will have additional weight given to them by a recommendation on the part of the committee that has thoroughly investigated the matter.

Mr. REED. Will you allow immediate action?

Mr. MILLS. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. REED. Will you allow the committee to report for immediate action?

Mr. MILLS. Let them have the right to report at any time.

Mr. REED. I mean for immediate action when the report comes before the House.

Mr. SPRINGER and others. Oh, no!

Mr. REED. I thought so.

Mr. MILLS. The report will be privileged, and will stand on the same footing as any similar business. I am willing that it shall be privileged to that extent.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does the gentleman mean to refer them to the Committee on Claims with instructions to report them in a bill, and then await the usual result of such reports?

Mr. MILLS. I mean with instructions that they shall be reported upon as soon as practicable.

Mr. DIBBLE. In answer to the gentleman I will say I am not willing to concede for these claims a position which the experience of members of this House shows will render their consideration precarious if not absolutely impossible. All the object of this resolution is to insure consideration; and when the consideration comes the subject can be discussed and disposed of and a final decision of Congress had. This is the only way, judging from our experience in this House, in which that result can be obtained.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from South Carolina says that claims reported by the Court of Claims have been rejected by this House. I will not undertake to say that that has not happened. But what the gentleman suggests has not been the means the House has resorted to heretofore for informing itself in reference to claims. When the report has gone to the Committee on Claims, for instance, they have taken up the claims through a subcommittee, examined them in detail, and rejected many of them.

It is through committees that the wisest legislation always comes, and I hope we are not going to depart from the rule in this particular case. I do not see, sir, repeating myself, why it is that we should put this class of claims on a different footing from that on which we put all other claims. We have never made the appropriation bills vehicles for reporting claims against the Government to the House, and I trust we are not going to do it now.

We are at the beginning of a session; we are here with a certain uneasiness lest there should be heedlessness in the manner of expenditures of the public moneys.

Mr. DIBBLE. I do not like to interrupt my friend from Georgia, but I wish to ask the Chair whether I am limited to one hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask the Chair how much time I have left.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina has twenty-five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. DIBBLE. I feel constrained, in justice to other members of the House, to restrict my friend from Georgia a little in the amount of time. I yield to him two minutes further.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will make a better arrangement than that. There are many gentlemen here who do not agree with him. I am willing, if it be agreeable to the gentleman, to take the floor after his time shall have expired and yield to him such time as may have been taken from him.

Mr. DIBBLE. I would rather control the time myself. I desire to call the previous question at the expiration of the hour.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from South Carolina, I understand, wishes to give me but two minutes more. If that is his proposition I will say that I do not care about that sort of discussion.

Mr. DIBBLE. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] five minutes.

Mr. MILLS. I give notice that at the expiration of the hour I will move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. OATES. I can not see any good purpose in a reference of this resolution to the Committee on Claims, because so far as that committee could go the Court of Claims has already gone. It has ascertained the facts, and in accordance with its opinions of the law has reported these claims for allowance.

There is but one objection, it seems to me, that can well be made against this resolution, if it is understood to conclude the committee or the House, and that is the doubt which rests upon the minds of a good many gentlemen and has done so during the whole period of the controversy on these claims, as to whether this Government is legally liable for them. That question during the last session of Congress was before the Judiciary Committee, and by that committee received full consideration, and the majority agreed to report to this House—and it was reported but I believe never acted upon—a bill in accordance with the desire expressed to some of the committee on the part of the law officers of the Government, that an appeal in some of these cases, to be selected by the Attorney-General, should be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and by that high tribunal determined, in order to free the minds of people from the doubt as to the liability of the Government.

Unless this is done it seems to me that the resolution of the gentleman from South Carolina is a proper means of disposing of these claims. Unless this House and the other are going to provide for a test of the liability of the Government by the Supreme Court of the United States, these claimants are entitled to have an appropriation for the payment of the amount which the Court of Claims under a law of Congress has found is due them.

I therefore favor the reference resolution offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, and pending its consideration by the Committee on Appropriations those gentlemen who desire to have the question tested before the Supreme Court of the United States will have an opportunity to attain that object by offering bills and sending them to the Judiciary Committee, from which no doubt they will be duly reported. Then this House and the other can act thereon and provide a means of appeal and final trial. But, sir, if this is not to be done, then these claimants, having acted under a law of Congress and gone before the Court of Claims and obtained an adjudication in their favor, are entitled, in my judgment, to have an appropriation made for the payment of their claims.

Mr. BLOUNT. Did the court pass on the question of the legality of the claims?

Mr. OATES. I am satisfied myself of their legality, and am prepared to vote in favor of them; but if gentlemen desire to test the question before the Supreme Court I am willing that shall be done, and will vote for a bill to give jurisdiction and allow the claims to be taken there. On the other hand, if that is not to be done, then I am in favor of paying them.

Mr. SOWDEN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. DIBBLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOWDEN. Under the act referring these claims to the court is not the Government precluded from the right of appeal?

Mr. DIBBLE. It can not have that right without independent legislation on the subject.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, this is, after all, a practical question. At least three-score of the members present now know, and the rest of them before the end of the session will know, that there are a great many ways of killing a bill besides a direct negative vote of the House. Among the methods, one is to send it to a committee, and especially to the Committee on Claims, which is so overburdened with work that it can report on but very few of the matters that are referred to it.

The present proposition is to send this to the Committee on Appropriations with directions to report it upon a deficiency bill for the action of the House. The Committee on Appropriations can consider these items and report against them or report for them, but in no event will they be allowed to prevent the House from voting on them. That is the proposition. If that is refused and these claims are sent to the Committee on Claims, this House will adjourn without a vote. I admit that there ought to be some reason for taking this matter out of the ordinary course, if it is to be taken out of the ordinary course. What is the reason? The Congress of the United States, by a solemn enactment, has referred this class of claims to a court of its own constitution, appointed by itself and paid by itself, with instructions to ascertain whether these claims are due in law and in fact. That court, after solemn judicial investigation, has decided that the United States, upon the law and the fact, is liable. In the act giving the court that jurisdiction we reserved the right to pass upon this question under the light of the opinion of the court; but having that opinion, having procured it in judicial fashion, having paid for it, it does seem to me that after eighty years of waiting on the part of these claimants, after nearly three generations to whom the money was due have faded off from the earth, we ought to make no more dilatory opposition, but ought as a Congressional body to come squarely and manfully up to the yes or no answer for which every man must be responsible to his constituents and to his conscience.

In other words, if the course that is proposed is unusual, the case is unusual also. If it is a rare course there are rare reasons for it. The matter for this House to decide, here and now, is practically this: Shall we vote on these claims directly, or shall we not?

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield me three minutes?

Mr. DIBBLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, this is simply a question of the orderly proceeding of this House. Every other case that comes from the Court of Claims under the Bowman act is referred to the Committee on Claims, just as other private claims are referred, but here is a proposition to take these cases out of the ordinary course and out of the ordinary jurisdiction of the House, and refer them to the Committee on Appropriations. It seems to me, sir, that this motion is premature. This resolution takes away from the Committee on Claims its jurisdiction under the rules of the House and makes the Appropriations Committee a claims committee. Heretofore the Appropriations Committee has never appropriated for private claims except in extraordinary cases, and the rules of the last House—which I presume will be the rules of this House also—require that all private claims shall be referred to the Committee on Claims, or to the Committee on War Claims, according to the nature of the case. This resolution proposes to make these claims privileged, and to refer them, not to the Committee on Claims, to which they would properly go, but to the Appropriations Committee, which is a privileged committee with authority to report at any time, and the resolution further instructs the Appropriations Committee to report these claims in a deficiency bill. Now a deficiency bill is one of the bills which provide for carrying on the ordinary expenses of the Government, and it was never intended that private claims should be included in such a bill.

Besides, these claims have not yet been finally adjudicated by any tribunal of this Government. They were referred to the Court of Claims that the facts and the law as appearing to that tribunal might be reported to Congress; but the law providing for a reference to the court provided that "nothing in this act shall be construed as committing the United States to the payment of any such claim." This resolution commits the United States at once to the payment of these claims——

Mr. DIBBLE. Not at all.

Mr. SPRINGER. By ordering the Committee on Appropriations to report them to this House as part of the expenses of this Government, for which we are bound to make appropriations.

I hope this resolution will be referred to the Committee on Claims, and that all these claims may take the usual course; otherwise I shall ask that all the other claims which may come from the Committee on Claims with a favorable recommendation under the Bowman Act shall also be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, to be treated as a part of the legal and equitable demands against the Government for which that committee must provide. I ask that this matter be treated as we are accustomed to treat all similar questions. I hope a law may be passed providing that one of these cases may be taken on appeal from the decision of the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States, giving the latter tribunal an opportunity to pass finally upon this question.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER. Thirteen minutes.

Mr. DIBBLE. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the position assumed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] is unquestionably the logical position applicable to this case as it is now presented. If the Congress of the United States does not propose to allow these cases, with those which are to follow, amounting to millions of dollars, to be finally adjudicated by the Supreme Court of the United States, then these claims ought to be paid, and paid at once, and for the reason that I regard the findings by the Court of Claims as entitled to greater dignity and respect than the report of any committee of the House made in the ordinary way. But, Mr. Speaker, the Department of Justice, which has had control of this litigation on the part of the Government, if I am correctly informed (I have not seen the report), has recommended that Congress permit an appeal to be taken by either party from the judgment of the Court of Claims (if it may be called a judgment) to the Supreme Court of the United States, which tribunal shall be allowed to render its final judgment upon the questions involved.

Personally, I feel that if this question were now put to a vote, I should vote against the appropriation—first, because we have not the final judgment of any court; but secondly, because the Department of Justice, having control of this litigation on the part of the Government, is not satisfied with the judgment, or rather findings of fact, if you please, which has been rendered by the Court of Claims; and I think before we pay, that Department which has investigated and conducted these suits should be satisfied. But if the Supreme Court of the United States should settle the questions involved and decide finally against the Government, then I should be for the payment of these judgments, as I am for the payment of every final judgment rendered by the supreme judicial tribunal of this land.

I submit therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina is premature. It anticipates the wishes of the Attorney-General, and seeks to defeat the action advised by him. If the course proposed is to be adopted with reference to these cases, it should become a precedent for every other class of claims—certainly for claims which are supported by the final judgments of the Supreme Court of the United States, some of which are now resting against the Government. I hope that these claims will not be allowed to take the course proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina, but that, in accordance with the recommendation of the Department of Justice, which has been intrusted with the supervision of these matters, the Supreme Court of the United States will be allowed to pass finally upon the legality of these claims, and render such judgment as seems proper in the premises before we pay either or any of them; and that is all I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] has ten minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, the proposition that the Supreme Court of the United States should deliver a final judgment in relation to the French spoliation claims was before the Houses of Congress for legislative consideration at the time when the bill which became a law was under discussion; and gentlemen who are familiar with the history of this legislation will well remember that the friends of these claims were perfectly willing that they should go to the Supreme Court of the United States for final adjudication, and that after such final disposition by the Supreme Court nothing further should be done by Congress except to appropriate the money. But the very gentlemen, some of them, who are now opposing this resolution, said "No." They were not willing to relinquish on the part of Congress the power of final decision; and it was in deference to the views of the opponents of these claims that such a provision was stricken out. If, now, the course suggested by these gentlemen be adopted, what happens? After repeated knocking at the doors of Congress, we secure the passage of a bill for the adjudication of these claims. During its discussion two methods of settling the matter are proposed—one that the claims should go to the Court of Claims for consideration and decision, and should then come back for the final action of Congress; the other that the Court of Claims should have the power to render a judgment which should become final upon an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. In deference to the views of the opponents of these claims we gave them their choice; they adopted the plan which was embodied in the present law. Now, after they have had their choice, after everything has been done according to their plan, they come to us and ask us to adopt the other plan. We have allowed them their option as to the course which should be pursued. A court has solemnly decided that sundry of these claims are just. At the instance of these gentlemen, we willingly agreed to submit the adjudications of that court for final action by Congress. They now wish all this to be wiped out, and ask that the plan which they before rejected be now adopted. Mr. Speaker, this looks very much like what we call a dilatory motion.

The justice of these claims is sanctioned by names which have dignified the bench of the United States. Chief-Justice Marshall, familiar with the circumstances of these cases as things within his own day and generation, put his approval on the justice of these claims. I think the gentleman from Illinois drew the proper distinction in regard to this resolution. We do want a privileged position for these cases—not privileged in such a way as to commit the House to any particular final decision, but privileged in such a way that after eighty-five years have passed we may now have a final hearing and adjudication upon these cases, to which I submit, after such delay, we are fairly entitled. If they go into the Supreme Court, it would take four years before any one of them would be decided. If every case had to go to the Supreme Court, not one of the members of this House would be left when the final decision of the last case would take place. The present claimants would then have all passed away. If that is to be the course suggested by the opponents of this resolution, I hope no such disposition will be agreed to by the House.

I reiterate that there is nothing that commits the House, except that the last clause of the resolution provides for their submission to the House for action. It is not simply an instruction to insert these claims in the bill for the purpose of passing them, but it is to insert them in the bill that is to be reported to the House for the consideration of the House. And when the appropriation bill comes up, as we all know, it is considered item by item in the Committee of the Whole. The utmost latitude of debate is allowed. The whole question is debated under the five-minute rule. Every gentleman on the floor will have the right to be heard, if he desires to do so, as there is no previous question in the Committee of the Whole. Any one item can be objected to, and every gentleman on the floor can express his objection to any part of the claim. The whole question can be sifted down to the very bottom. Justice can be done in every one of the cases. That is all I ask. My motion is not to prevent any discussion in the Committee of the Whole. The fullest latitude of debate will be allowed under the rules, and any item can be acted on as the House chooses. Members will have the opportunity from now until the time when the deficiency bill will be reported to study each of these cases. If any one wants to study them, he can even go to the records of the Court of Claims for that purpose. All my resolution provides for is that these claimants shall have an opportunity for the consideration of and action on their claims by the House.

I now demand the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the previous question will not prevail, as I would like to say a word in this connection. It involves a large sum of money; but I do not wish to deprive the gentleman, by delay, of the right to make the motion, and I will yield the floor back to him, so that he may renew his motion.

Mr. DIBBLE. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania all of the time remaining, lacking one minute.

The SPEAKER. There are only three minutes remaining.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, there is more involved in this question than mere parliamentary attitude of this class of claims. The Committee on Appropriations heretofore, with a single exception, has always recommended the payment of claims which came to that committee as the judgment of the Court of Claims. That exception was the Choctaw claim, covering the sum of $2,800,000, and the committee recommended as to that claim that further information was desired.

Now, if I understand correctly the attitude of these claims, the Court of Claims was, by law, authorized to find the facts and report to Congress for review. They are not, in fact, therefore, judgments of the Court of Claims. But, in addition, the Judiciary Committee of the last House reported a bill conferring the right upon the Department of Justice to appeal from the findings in these cases.

A MEMBER. To both parties?

Mr. RANDALL. No, conferring upon the Government the right to appeal. If I am wrong I can be corrected, but my recollection is that the Committee on the Judiciary reported in favor of Congress passing a law giving the Government of the United States the right to appeal in any of these cases.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. I desire but one sentence.

Mr. DIBBLE. I demand the previous question.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. I would like to know under what rule there is a limitation as to time for debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has frequently decided that in the absence of a resolution adopting the rules of the House formally, the proceedings of the House are governed by the general parliamentary law, of which the practice of the House constitutes a part—in fact, the principal part.

Mr. SPRINGER. If I had known such to be the case I would have objected long ago.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the demand for the previous question is voted down?

The SPEAKER. Debate will proceed.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will allow the debate to proceed. I think no one will overstep the proper limitation of debate.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Appropriations is composed of able and experienced members of the House. If this question is referred to them they will report back in a bill, and there is no precluding them from making remarks or presenting their opinion upon their own report. If their report as to any one of these claims comes before the House it comes up, not for favorable action, necessarily, by the House, but for such action as the House shall see proper to take. The House does not commit itself by simply allowing consideration. They can report the claims in the bill from the Committee on Appropriations, and then report upon that, recommending that certain claims be stricken out, if you choose. So they have full opportunity to express their opinion, and there is no better or more experienced committee in the House to which that duty could be assigned.

I now demand the previous question.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question; and on a division there were—ayes 123, noes 70.

Mr. BLOUNT. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 163, nays 84, not voting 77; as follows:

YEAS—163.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC TIMBER LANDS.

Mr. WHITE, of New York, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Department of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to this House a statement in detail of the plan of legislation referred to on page 23 of his report to the President for 1887, and thought by him to be needed for the disposal of the public timber lands, so as to secure at the same time the preservation of the natural forest lands at the headwaters of navigable rivers and put within the reach of settlers a legal means of providing themselves with timber for building their homes, fuel, and other domestic purposes.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the resolution just read be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, when appointed.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO RULES.

Mr. WHITTHORNE offered the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Rule XXIV be so amended as to read:

"Fourth. On Thursday of each week, after the morning hour, it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House shall now proceed to consider bills and resolutions on the House Calendar in their regular order; and if this motion fail, then public business shall be in order as on other days."

REPORTED CLAIMS ON THE CALENDAR.

Mr. McCOMAS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCOMAS. The Bowman Act, chapter 116, volume 22, of the Statutes at Large, in section 7, provides—

That reports of the Court of Claims to Congress under this act, if not finally acted upon during the session at which they are reported, shall be continued from session to session and from Congress to Congress until the same shall be finally acted upon.

Now, in order to give effect and force to that continuance from Congress to Congress, my question is, will not claims thus reported back from the Court of Claims to the last Congress and then reported by its committee to the Forty-ninth Congress with an accompanying bill standing on the Calendar of the last Congress—will not those claims, under the force of the terms of the section which I have read, be placed upon the Calendar and be the first claims in priority on the Calendar for consideration during the present Congress? I send to the Speaker's desk the act to which I have referred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair remembers the terms of the act. The practice in the House has been when a report is received from the Court of Claims it is referred to the committee which had original jurisdiction of the matter; the Committee on War Claims or the Committee on Claims, as the case may be. If that committee during that Congress reports the claim back again to the House, the Chair thinks that the section of the act to which the gentleman from Maryland refers requires the report to be continued on the Calendar, and the Chair has so instructed the Clerk in the present session to place on the Calendar in regular order all the reports made by committees on reports from the Court of Claims. That will be done.

PAY TO CERTAIN HOUSE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. BURROWS. I offer for present consideration the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution giving one month's pay to certain employés of the House of Representatives.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all officers and employés of the House who were employed on the 5th day of December, 1887, and who have ceased or shall, prior to the 1st of January, 1888, cease to be so employed, shall be paid a sum equal to one month's pay at the rate they were severally receiving on the 5th day of December, 1887; and an amount sufficient for this purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the same to be immediately available.

Mr. BURROWS. It is well known that certain employés of the Forty-ninth Congress who held over till the meeting of this Congress with the expectation of being retained, have been discharged. This is the usual resolution under such circumstances, to give one month's pay to enable these persons to return to their homes.

Mr. OATES. I move to lay that resolution on the table.

The motion to lay the resolution on the table was not agreed to.

Mr. OATES. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BURROWS. I hope that motion will not prevail. If the resolution were referred it would be of no service.

The motion to refer was not agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask that the resolution be again reported.

The joint resolution was again read.

Mr. OATES. If in order, I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. OATES, the Speaker stated that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. OATES. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 83.

So (further count not being called for) the motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be considered as having been read a second time. The question is now on ordering it to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. OATES. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] I want to put gentlemen on the record.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 15 members voting therefor.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. OATES. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 110, noes 34.

So (further count not being called for) the joint resolution (H. Res. 3) was passed.

Mr. BURROWS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask the gentleman from Texas to withdraw his motion for a moment to allow me to submit a resolution for reference to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that several gentlemen have resolutions which they desire to submit for reference to that committee.

Mr. MILLS. I withhold my motion to allow that to be done.

AMENDMENTS OF RULES.

Mr. BUCKALEW submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That a select committee, to consist of nine members, be appointed upon election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress.

Mr. McRAE offered the following; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the forty-ninth subdivision of Rule XI of the rules of the last House of Representatives be amended by adding, after the word "House," in the fifteenth line of page 245, the following:

"And the said committees shall have leave to call up for consideration any bill or resolution so reported at any time after the report thereon has been printed, and in making such calls, either in the House or in the Committee of the Whole House, the committees shall have precedence in the order named in this rule."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, offered the following; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Proposed amendment to the rules of the House of Representatives relating to bills for the improvements of rivers and harbors:

First. Amend Rule XVI by adding to section 9, "or bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors."

Second. Amend Rule XXIV, section 7, by adding, after the words "general appropriation bills," the following: "And bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors."

Third. Amend Rule XXI by adding a section between sections 6 and 7, as follows: "In bills for the improvements of rivers and harbors all appropriations for snagging operations, for the pay of regularly employed officials, and for other subjects not herein provided for, shall be in a separate bill; all appropriations for works other than snagging operations shall be accompanied by a report of the estimate for final cost for completion; all works other than snagging operations, and of which the final cost of completion is less than $500,000 may be appropriated for in a separate bill; every work of which the final cost of completion is $500,000 or more shall be appropriated for in a separate bill, and it shall not be in order to make any such appropriation unless the bill provides for the completion of the work; and it shall not be in order to report or amend any bill for the improvements of rivers and harbors contrary to these provisions.

Mr. MACDONALD presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota to Congress in relation to extending the time for filing claims for additional bounties in certain cases; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The memorial is as follows:

STATE OF MINNESOTA.

Twenty-fifth session.] S. F. [No. 346.

period of not less than three years, and having served the term of his enlistment, has been honorably discharged, and who has received or who is entitled to receive from the United States, under existing laws, a bounty of $100 and no more; and any such soldier enlisted for not less than three years, who has been honorably discharged on account of wounds received in the line of duty, and the widow, minor children, or parents, in the order named, of any such soldier who died in the service of the United States, or of disease or wounds received while in the service and in the line of his duty, shall be paid the additional bounty of $100; and

Whereas said act expired July 1, 1880, by limitation, and at the time of its expiration there were many soldiers' widows and parents of soldiers in Minnesota and other States who were entitled to the extra bounty provided for by said act of July 28, 1866, who were prevented from making their applications and having them allowed before the expiration of the time allowed by said act; and

Whereas a large number of claims of Minnesota soldiers for bounty have been allowed and have for a long time remained unpaid for the want of an appropriation to pay the same: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to use their influence to secure the passage of any act enabling soldiers entitled to extra bounty under the act of July 28, 1866, to file their claims and receive the same amount which their comrades have already received, and also an act appropriating money for the payment of such bounty claims as have been allowed.

Resolved, That the secretary of state forward a certificate copy of the resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress forthwith.

Whereas the arrears-of-pension act of one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine (1879) provides that all pensions granted or applications filed on or after July first, one thousand eight hundred and eighty (1880), shall commence on the date of filing; and

Whereas many brave and disabled soldiers were denied arrears under this act, and without any cause for this exclusion; and

Whereas pensions granted should be commensurate with the period of disability, without regard to the time of filing of application: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, That Congress be requested to repeal so much of said act as limits the arrears of pensions to applications filed prior to said date of July first, one thousand eight hundred and eighty (1880); and that said act be so amended as to extend such limit according to the recommendation of the national pension committee of the Grand Army of the Republic, so as to remove said limits.

That Congress, at the present session, be respectfully requested to pass the pension acts recommended by the national pension committee of the Grand Army of the Republic.

That the Secretary of State be, and is hereby, requested to send certified copies of this resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

A memorial to the Congress of the United States asking for an appropriation to pay the unpaid balance awarded to citizens of Florida under the provisions of the several acts of Congress passed in furtherance of article 9 of the treaty between the United States and Spain concluded February 22, 1819.

Whereas in article 9 of the treaty between the United States and Spain concluded February 22, 1819, the United States obligated itself to cause satisfaction to be made for the injuries, if any, which, by process of law, shall be established to have been suffered by the Spanish officers and individual Spanish inhabitants by the late operations of the American army in Florida, and article 11 of said treaty further provided for the payment of the same if the sum of the claims did not exceed $5,000,000; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States, in furtherance of said stipulation, did pass the following acts: "An act to carry into effect the ninth article of the treaty concluded between the United States and Spain," approved February 22, 1819, and "An act for the relief of certain inhabitants of East Florida," approved June 26, 1834, under and by virtue of the several acts, the judge of the superior court therein named, in conformity with the spirit and letter of the said acts, and under a just and equitable construction of the same, did adjudicate said claims, decreeing a principal sum, together with interest upon the same for years at a fixed rate per cent., and did report the same, together with the evidence on which they were founded, to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Treasury, in conformity with the law, did pay to the several claimants whose claims had been adjudicated, or to their authorized agents, the principal sum decreed, but from some cause unknown to your memorialists declined to pay the interest, which constituted a part of the award in each case; and

Whereas your memorialists have been informed and believe that the sum so paid in part satisfaction of the said award does not exceed $1,500,000: Therefore,

The Legislature of Florida, memorializing the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, Respectfully request that an adequate appropriation be made to pay the unpaid balance, being the interest awarded as aforesaid, and that the Secretary of the Treasury be required to pay the same. Your memorialists believe that the Congress of the United States ought in justice and equity to provide for the payment of the interest so awarded in consistency with the requirements of the treaty aforesaid, and the several acts of Congress in furtherance thereof, and respectfully request that our Senators and Representatives in Congress present this memorial in their respective Houses, and that the secretary of state do furnish copies of this memorial to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL. I report back from the Committee on Finance the bill (S. 600) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make final adjustment of claims of certain foreign steamship companies arising from the illegal exaction of tonnage dues, with a recommendation that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

I will state that the Committee on Finance have heretofore considered bills like this for interest adversely, but the Committee on Claims having had this bill under consideration last year, we think it is proper that it should be referred to them again.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 473) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be examined certain vouchers filed, or to be filed, by the State of Missouri, or her agent or agents, for sums claimed to be due from the Government of the United States on account of payments made by said State since April 22, 1882, to the officers and enlisted men of her militia forces for military services rendered to the United States in the suppression of the rebellion, as evidenced by the proper pay-rolls heretofore filed with, examined, and accepted by the Government of the United States, and to report to Congress, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 287) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. As a member of the Committee on Public Lands, I respectfully dissent from that bill as reported by the majority of that committee. I regard it simply as an effort on the part of Congress to usurp the judicial power of the United States for the purpose of reversing, setting aside, and annulling many decrees which have been passed, some of them in the inferior courts and some of them in the Supreme Court of the United States. I concur in the views which have been taken by the President of the United States in his veto message upon the bill when he refused to give it his signature during the last Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 257) granting a pension to Mary S. Logan, to report it with an amendment, which consists in correcting the middle letter of her name by the substitution of the letter "A" for the letter "S." I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill at this time?

Mr. BERRY. I ask that the bill be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for information, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BERRY. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. FARWELL. I see that the committee recommend that the letter "S" be stricken out and the letter "A" be put in the name of Mrs. Logan, so as to read "Mary A. Logan." That is an error. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the matter so that the proper name may be put in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the committee have reported an amendment to the bill. The bill is now on the Calendar, and that matter can be considered when the bill is brought up for consideration.

Mr. DAVIS. I am also instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 574) to increase the pension of Mrs. Apolline A. Blair, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.?

Mr. GORMAN. I object. Let it go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 607) for the relief of Juliet C. Palmer, widow and administratrix of James C. Palmer, late Surgeon-General United States Navy, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Bridget Adams, of Worcester, Mass., praying for the removal of the charges of desertion against her husband, late a private in Thirty-first Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 586) for the relief of Asher W. Foster, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 158) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the trustees of the Porter Academy certain property in the city of Charleston, S. C., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 503) for the relief of Maj. William M. Maynadier, a paymaster in the United States Army, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAMPTON. I am also instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 256) for a survey and estimate for a railroad from the mainland to Key West, Fla., and for a canal connecting the same with the St. John's River, for military and naval purposes, to report it adversely.

Mr. CALL. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 5) in relation to the claim of John B. Read against the United States for the alleged use of projectiles for rifled ordnance, claimed as the invention of said Read, and by him alleged to have been used pursuant to a contract or arrangement made between him and the War Department in 1856, for which no compensation had been made; also in relation to the claim of William E. Woodbridge, based upon the plea of alleged priority in this line of invention, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 33) for the relief of Thomas J. Miller, of Washington Territory, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

IMPORTATION OF FOREIGN MERCHANDISE.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Finance instruct me to report an original bill, and I ask that it be placed on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 977) to regulate the importation of foreign merchandise and to secure uniformity in the classification and valuation thereof, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. ALLISON. In view of the importance of the bill, as it affects materially the administration of the law respecting the importation of foreign goods and makes many important modifications of existing laws upon that subject, I ask, by instruction of the committee, that 10,000 extra copies of the bill be printed in pamphlet form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution reported by the Committee on Finance will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That 10,000 copies of Senate bill No. 977 be printed in pamphlet form, 2,000 of which shall be for the use of the Committee on Finance, and 8,000 for the use of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The resolution must go to the Committee on Printing under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. PLATT. Unless the printing will cost more than $500 it does not need to go to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair understands the rule, the resolution having been reported by a standing committee, a reference to the Committee on Printing is not necessary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Chair would kindly have the rule read. I was under the impression that the rule positively required that all motions to print extra copies, no matter where they came from, should be referred to the Committee on Printing; but I may be mistaken. I have no objection to the thing being done, but we ought to adhere to the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks on reflection that the Senator from Vermont is correct in his interpretation of the rule, and that a motion to print additional copies should be referred to the Committee on Printing. Such being the case, the order of reference will be made.

PAY OF CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. ALLISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred a joint resolution (H. Res. 2) authorizing and directing the payment of the salaries of the officers and employés of Congress for the month of December, 1887, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may be considered now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read at length for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read at length for information, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Be it resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and instructed to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1887, on the 22d day of said month.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, the joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. ALLISON. I am also instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives providing for a holiday recess, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, December 22, 1887, they stand adjourned until Wednesday, January 4, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution reported by him. Is there objection?

Mr. PLUMB. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution will be placed upon the Calendar.

CLERK TO A COMMITTEE.

Mr. PADDOCK. I report with a favorable recommendation, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, a resolution submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] authorizing the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America to employ a clerk. I will state that the committee not being authorized to employ a clerk, the Senator, who is the chairman of the committee, is in a position where he is not authorized to employ a clerk for himself separately, and therefore he is without a clerk entirely. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America be, and it hereby is, authorized to employ a clerk during the sessions, who shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, the usual per diem compensation.

PRINTING OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE, ETC.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution for printing the President's message, etc., to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed, in pamphlet form, for the use of the Senate, 1,000 copies of the annual message of the President, and the reports proper of the heads of the Departments, Comptroller of the Currency, Director of the Mint, and Treasurer of the United States, without the appendices.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. How many copies are specified?

Mr. MANDERSON. One thousand copies.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that the usual number?

Mr. MANDERSON. That is the usual number ordered by the Senate of the document in this form. Its cost is under $500, costing $315, and it is the number usually ordered by the Senate in this form. I think the number is sufficient.

The resolution was agreed to.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN TRADERS.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate have instructed me to report with amendment, in the nature of a substitute, the resolution submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] in regard to the Select Committee on Indian Traders, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution and the amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Indian Traders be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to continue the investigation directed to be made under Senate resolution of June 3, 1886, with all the authority and powers granted to the original committee by said resolution of June 3, 1886, including the taking of testimony and the employment of a stenographer.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Amend the resolution so as to make it read as follows:

"Resolved, That the Select Committee on Indian Traders be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to continue the investigation directed to be made under Senate resolution of June 3, 1886, with all the authority and powers heretofore granted to the committee, including the taking of testimony and the employment of a clerk and a stenographer; and that all necessary expenses of such investigation be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

"Also, that the compensation of the stenographer authorized by resolution of the Senate of December 14, 1887, to be employed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections be paid out of said contingent fund upon like approval."

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. PADDOCK. I will state with reference to the provision in the resolution as to the stenographer of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which committee was authorized the other day to employ a stenographer, that this provision was put in in order to cover a defect in the other resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the resolution proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. CALL. I desire to ask some member of the Committee on Indian Affairs a question. Before voting on the resolution I should like to know from some one why it is that the ordinary committees of this body are not capable, during the session of Congress, of dealing with the subjects which properly belong to those committees? I hear a number of resolutions read constituting special committees for subjects over which the standing committees of this body have jurisdiction, and for the purpose of considering which they are created and continued.

I have no desire to make any captious objection to the pending resolution, but I should like to know why it is that the ordinary regular standing committees of this body can not perform the duties intrusted to them.

Mr. PLATT. If I can have the attention of the Senate, I will make a statement with regard to this particular empowering of the Select Committee on Indian Traders of the present session.

At the last Congress a select committee was raised to investigate certain charges with reference to licenses to Indian traders and the attempt by those traders to sell their licenses. That committee took testimony during the session of Congress, and was authorized to sit during the recess to continue the investigation. It did so, and it met here on the 26th of November for the express purpose of allowing the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to put in testimony in reply. But the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, we found, had been afflicted by the loss of his wife, and it was impossible for him to put in his reply at that time, and of course the matter had to be postponed.

At the present session a Select Committee on Indian Traders was constituted, with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] as chairman. The object of this resolution is to allow the continuance and completion of the investigation which was ordered at a previous Congress, and which was postponed under the circumstances I have detailed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

INDIAN OPERATIONS ON THE PLAINS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I report back from the Committee on Printing the documents which accompany the letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the testimony and report of Colonel Carrington, United States Army, in reference to operations on the plains against the Indians. I am instructed by the committee to move that the usual number of copies of the document be printed for the use of the Senate, but no additional copies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The indorsement of the document will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a Senate resolution of February 11, 1887, certain papers relative to Indian operations on the plains in 1867."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is that the usual number be printed. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

GOVERNMENT POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the bill (S. 534) to provide for the establishment of a postal telegraphic system, which I introduced the other day, and which was laid upon the table, be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I had intended to submit some brief observations upon the bill, but, trusting to the zeal and fidelity which the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has hitherto shown in favor of some such measure, I think I can safely send the bill to them without any preliminary observations, trusting that it will be very speedily reported, when it can be discussed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill, having been read the second time, will be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CULLOM. I had the honor of introducing a bill on the same subject, the bill (S. 614) to provide for the establishment and operation of the United States postal telegraph, which I ask be taken from the table and referred to the same committee, without any remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been read the second time, will be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

INDEX OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. PLATT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Mr. FAULKNER. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I have inserted no amount in the resolution, believing that should be more properly inserted by the committee to whom the subject is referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, if there be no objection.

CAPTAIN HALL'S OREGON VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I submit the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed, if not incompatible with the public service, to report to the Senate at his earliest practicable convenience a copy of all records in his Department relating to what is commonly known and called "Captain Hall's Company of Oregon Volunteers," which it is alleged served in the Cayuse war in the Territory of Oregon; when such company was organized, and where and when, if at all, mustered into the service of the United States, and when disbanded, and the names of the persons respectively composing such company.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The resolution does not seem to be in the usual form of such resolutions. I suggest to the Senator from Oregon that he modify it by striking out the words "if not incompatible with the public service."

Mr. MITCHELL. I accept the suggestion. Let the resolution be amended so as to read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate, etc.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

PRINTING OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 10,000 additional copies of the annual message of the President of the United States to the Fiftieth Congress be printed in pamphlet form for the use of the Senate.

ADMISSION OF UTAH.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senate to take up the resolution which I submitted yesterday, in regard to printing the Utah memorial.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution submitted by him yesterday, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the petition and accompanying papers of the citizens of the United States in the Territory of Utah, claiming to represent the wishes and requests to Congress of 200,000 American citizens, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CALL. I understood the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK], who objected to the passage of the resolution, to withdraw his objection.

Mr. PADDOCK. I can not hear the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. If there be no objection, and I believe there is none, I ask that the resolution be adopted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Territories, which now has the papers. My reason for making the motion is that that committee ought to see what is contained in this long memorial, etc., before it is printed, particularly in the RECORD, which is a very expensive performance, and because we have had one piece of experience hitherto with printing a similar paper in the RECORD without knowing what was in it, which, had it been known, I think the Senate would not have allowed to be printed in the RECORD, because it was obviously improper; the language of it was improper and disrespectful.

I think the Committee on Territories had better examine these papers before the Senate acts on the question whether they shall, at an expense of $500 or $1,000, be printed in the whole edition of the RECORD. Therefore I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Territories, which now has possession of the papers.

Mr. CALL. Before that motion is voted on I desire to say that if the Senator from Vermont has paid any attention to the memorial he will perceive that there is nothing in it which is objectionable to the Congress of the United States. It is only a statement from a large majority—as they claim—of 200,000 citizens of the United States of what they desire.

I am not here now to advocate their wishes, or express any opinion at this time upon that subject, but I do affirm that it does not rest with any Senator or any member of Congress to say, with any kind of justification in reason, or with any degree of respect for the people of the United States, that they shall not be heard here, or in advance to say that what they wish and what they state is not respectful to Congress, and for that reason should be suppressed and their right of petition practically denied.

There is nothing in the petition whatever, except a statement in regard to a public matter, the admission of Utah, and a statement of the facts as these citizens of the United States regard them.

This objection is made in the spirit of persecution of these people. They have been alleged to have some peculiar beliefs in reference to the domestic relations which are objectionable to us. This allegation is claimed by them to be true only so far as it relates to their religious belief that the relation is not unscriptural and not forbidden. As a matter of fact, they state that polygamy is practiced only by a small portion of their population; not 3 per cent., they insist, have ever been subject to the practice which has been charged upon them. I am informed by persons of intelligence and character, non-Mormons and anti-polygamists, that this charge is a myth upon which their opponents are seeking to make these objections for the purpose of obtaining the property of these people in Utah. I am informed by citizens of the United States, Republicans and Democrats, who have recently been in Utah, that not 3 per cent. of these people are guilty of the practices upon the assumption of which the Senator from Vermont makes this objection.

But be it true or not true, they have a right to be heard, and I shall now show by reading the memorial that there is nothing in it which is objectionable. I am sorry the Senator from Vermont puts me to this inconvenience, but I am not surprised at it, for the honorable Senator is not in the habit of avoiding those things which give inconvenience to others, although he gains nothing by his objections toward accomplishing his object.

Mr. PADDOCK. The resolution not only covers the memorial, but all the accompanying papers.

Mr. CALL. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. PADDOCK. The resolution not only covers the memorial which the Senator proposes to read, but all the accompanying papers, which are the proceedings of the constitutional convention, so called, the constitution itself, and other things.

Mr. CALL. I presume it is not desired to encumber the RECORD with any voluminous publication. The constitution need not be included. I understand the request made to me from these citizens of the United States to be that their memorial, stating their desire in respect to the admission of Utah, and the facts in reference to the number of the anti-polygamists in the Territory, both Mormon and non-Mormon, and the good faith of both polygamists and anti-polygamists in accepting the Edmunds-Hoar law and making it a part of their State constitution, may be printed.

The memorial reads as follows:

Memorial of the constitutional convention of Utah.

To the President and the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

GENTLEMEN: For the fifth time the people of Utah present to your honorable body a constitution providing for a republican form of government, and respectfully ask admission into the Union as a free and sovereign State.

Your memorialists are delegates in a constitutional convention, chosen by the people of this Territory, in mass meetings, to which all citizens of every party were publicly invited. The constitution presented herewith was framed by your memorialists with a desire to effect a political settlement of the questions which have heretofore interposed as the sole objections when Utah has applied for the rights and privileges of statehood.

Under recent acts of Congress no person practicing polygamy can vote or hold office in this Territory. Your memorialists are registered voters, and the constitution which they adopted on the 7th day of July, 1887, was ratified at the general election, August 1, 1887, by a popular legal vote of 13,195, only 502 voting agnist it. The total number of votes cast at the same election for precinct and county officers and members of the Legislative Assembly was 16,640. This shows a balance of 2,943 who refrained from voting on this question; the voters of the minority party having been so directed openly by their political leaders, who do not favor any movement for the removal of those disabilities which are common to the Territorial system, unless likely to be specially favorable to them.

The number of the voting population has been considerably reduced by the operations of Congressional statutes. The act of March 22, 1882, disfranchised all polygamists; the act of March 3, 1887, excluded all women from the polls; the test oath prescribed by the same law was so distasteful to many persons of all classes who were otherwise qualified that they abstained from registration, and as only registered voters could cast their ballots at the general election for or against the constitution framed by your memorialists, the total vote in its favor was, under the circumstances, remarkably large.

The people who have adopted and ratified this constitution are law-abiding citizens of the United States. They have not violated any law of Congress. The special provisions they have framed in reference to practices condemned by the popular voice were made in good faith, and so worded that they are practically unrepealable. In these, Congress has not imposed unusual requirements upon a new State, but the people have placed these restrictions upon themselves in order to meet prevailing objections and secure political harmony with the existing States. In doing this they consider they have but exercised a reserved and constitutional right. If Utah shall be admitted into the Union, these provisions will be strictly and fairly enforced.

Your memorialists have no hesitation in stating that almost the entire population of Utah are desirous of becoming fully identified as a State with the institutions of this great Republic, and of taking part in national affairs as loyal and as peaceable citizens. They have demonstrated their fitness for the duties, responsibilities, and privileges of Statehood. They are thrifty, temperate, industrious, intelligent, and progressive. They form a vigorous, stable, and permanent community, out of debt and ready to move forward in step with existing States.

The Territory has a population of not less than 200,000. Her wealth, exclusive of mines, which are untaxed and represent unknown millions, aggregates not less than $150,000,000. Her resources, products, interests, and prospects are conceded by all to be amply sufficient to sustain a State government, and have so frequently been presented to Congress and the nation, with statistics, that we deem it unnecessary to detail them in this memorial. The soil, irrigated by mountain streams diverted through canals and ditches over large areas once a desert, brings forth grain and fruit in rich abundance. Cattle and sheep roam upon a thousand hills and supply both home and foreign markets. Her woolen and other manufactories have become famous for their honest and useful products. Factories and work-shops supply labor to skilled and common artisans, who are content with reasonable wages, and among whom strikes and troubles with capital have hitherto been unknown. The necessities and many of the luxuries of life are abundant and cheap.

Minerals of all kinds abound within her borders, and the mining output aggregates from $7,000,000 to $10,000,000 annually. Apart from the precious metals, there are valuable deposits so varied in character and immense in quantity as to afford in themselves material for untold wealth. These await but the touch of the capital that a settled political condition will draw to Utah, to be brought forth for the benefit of her people and the enrichment of the nation. The great railroads which already have their termini in or near her capital city, with others in process of construction, place her people in easy communication with the rest of the country, and facilitate commercial relations. The telegraph, the telephone, the electric light, and other modern improvements are utilized extensively by her citizens. Her business status and reputation in the great centers of trade are unimpeachable. Her taxes are phenomenally low, and her internal affairs have been honestly and economically conducted. Her school system, with the best text-books used in the foremost schools of the country, provide strictly secular education for the children in every city and settlement. Her statistics bear very favorable comparison with even the older States. Nothing now stands in the way of her march to that proud position to which everything just and natural points as her destiny but those political disabilities which only statehood can remove.

We appeal to your honorable body to regard the wishes of a people who earnestly desire to aid in promoting the welfare and glory of the Union, and who, from the day their pioneers first unfurled the stars and stripes on this then Mexican soil, have looked forward to the time when they should enter the Union as a State, as guarantied to them in common with other residents on the territory acquired by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

We ask that the constitution of the proposed State of Utah shall receive the close and impartial attention of your honorable body. It guaranties "a republican form of government." It provides for equal rights and privileges before the law to citizens of all parties, creeds, and conditions. It is broad and liberal and contains the best provisions to be found in other State constitutions. It meets the demands that have been made upon the majority of the people of Utah when they have previously asked admission into the Union. What more can be required of any people?

The admission of Utah will relieve the Government of a question that has troubled it for a quarter of a century, and remove it from national to local regulation, where it properly belongs. It will add one more star to the national galaxy, increase the strength of the Union, save the country many thousands of dollars annually, and bind to the interests of the nation a body of honest, patriotic, and grateful people, who will be found, when the mists of misrepresentation and prejudice are cleared away, to be a community of which any government might be proud.

We ask for "a republican form of government," and we ask that it be given us now. For nearly forty years Utah has been pleading for statehood. Shall a deaf ear be still turned to her entreaties? We hope for better things. In behalf of the great majority of the voters who represent the vast majority of the people of Utah, we submit that having broken no law we should not be deprived of our liberties on account of objections raised against others. We ask for justice and a fair consideration of our cause, with the solemn pledge that Utah as a State will be faithfully devoted to true republican principles and to the interests and welfare of the Government of the United States. And your memorialists will ever pray.

Adopted in convention at Salt Lake City, Utah Territory, on the 8th day of October, A. D. 1887, by unanimous vote, and ordered to be signed by the president and secretary.

JOHN T. CAINE,
President.
HEBER M. WELLS,
Secretary.

Mr. President, I have read this memorial to show the insincerity of the objection which has been made by the Senator from Vermont to the printing of this memorial from 200,000 American citizens in the RECORD, as requested by them, to the end that they may have a hearing before the Congress and before the people of the United States.

The Senator from Vermont knew that there was nothing in this memorial disrespectful to Congress, and he knew that there was no reason in right or justice why the Senate of the United States should refuse to hear the petition of either one citizen, however poor or however erring, or of two hundred thousand citizens who have a right to be heard here, as much right as the Senator from Vermont or I have—a constitutional right to be heard in this body and before the American people; a solemnly guarantied right not only to be heard, but to have secured to them, and to each of them, all of the rights, immunities, and privileges which the Senator from Vermont has or which any other citizen of the United States has; a right of equality in all respects before the law, which the Senator, myself, and every other Senator have taken an oath to respect and defend and secure to them.

For one, I propose to respect and obey that oath, and not violate it either directly, or by evasion, or indirectly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Florida very much for his gratifying and complimentary allusions to me. They are worthy of him, and I trust I can bear them.

I certainly do not question the sincerity of the Senator from Florida, for he has stood behind this polygamous hierarchy every time they have had any interest to advance or any wholesome legislation to resist, so far as I now remember, at all times, and with great ability and considerable zeal. So I can with equal sincerity give him the praise to which he is justly entitled of being absolutely sincere in standing by this body of persons through thick and through thin, come good, come ill. I expect that he will continue to do so, and if in the process of time that Territory should become a State, and we could change the Constitution so that one person might be a Senator from two States, I have no doubt that the Senator from Florida would be the first Senator that the Mormon hierarchy would select, as they ought to.

But we come back to the question, what ought to be done in regard to printing in the RECORD papers of this character? I am for the first time advised of the contents of this memorial, so far as I was able to hear it read. There are a great many other papers, there are a great many answers to them in other papers, that might be read, if I chose to evade the just rules of the Senate by spending the morning in reading counter-statements, which would show the utter hypocrisy and gammon of this performance, a mere trick to get out from under the hand of Congress and the laws of the United States, on a promise that when they become a sovereign and independent State, standing, as the Constitution requires when they come in that they shall stand, on an equal footing with every other State in the Union, and having the right, whatever may be in their constitution about changing it, to change it at any time they please without the consent of Congress, and not being bound by any compact that they may make in regard to their social institutions, as the Supreme Court in another case, or in more than one, perhaps, has long ago decided, respecting the equality of all new States admitted into the Union. I understand all that, and I trust everybody does; and, for one, I do not propose to be a party to spending the money of the people of the United States in printing in the RECORD for circulation among the people this sort of thing. The record of the proceedings of the Senate is a record of its proceedings, and not intended to be a record of statements that people of the United States choose to make to Congress. That is where it stands, and therefore it is that I make the motion.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont is equally insincere, incorrect, and even frivolous in his statement that he has heard me stand behind the Mormon hierarchy and defend it. The Senator from Vermont has heard me stand behind human rights—the rights of women and children whom he was seeking to brand with a lifetime of sorrow and disgrace; he has heard me defend a patient and suffering anti-polygamous people when with the most exquisite cruelty he has sought to punish the poor innocent women and children in Utah by legislation which I regard as unconstitutional, unfeeling, inhuman, and subversive of the religion and precepts of the Divine Teacher. But I am as far from sustaining the Mormon or any other hierarchy as is the Senator from Vermont; indeed, I am much farther, for I am in favor of religious tolerance. I am a believer in the power of Christ's religion and His preachers, and the Senator from Vermont does not seem to be so. A Senator may be a defender of religious liberty, in favor of tolerance, without being a persecutor and without being inhuman towards women and children.

That much the Senator from Vermont has heard from me, but he has never heard, and he never will hear me stand in this Chamber to deny the rights of 200,000 citizens of the United States to whom he has sworn to give their constitutional rights. He has never heard me seek to prevent them from having a hearing, and he has never heard me advocate corrupt judicial tribunals or packed juries or the prostitution of the courts of justice and the laws of the land for the conviction even of criminals, much less of men and women who formed relations under peculiar religious beliefs of their own at a time when the right to make their own laws and regulate their own institutions had been guarantied to them by treaty and expressly conferred upon them by act of Congress. He has never heard me advocate branding a whole generation of young men and women, native-born and adopted citizens, with a stigma by law, and to declare them unworthy of trust and confidence as citizens because their fathers and mothers are charged with what we regard as objectionable relations and heterodox and unsound religious opinions. The Senator from Vermont has not heard me advocate the seizure of the places of worship and the property of citizens of the United States because they call themselves the Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints, and because a small number of them have been guilty of polygamy.

I have not expressed an opinion even as to how I should vote on this proposition, nor as to whether these people are or are not sincere. That is a question for future consideration and for evidence. I have, however, been informed by persons, Democrats and Republicans, as good as the Senator from Vermont or I, as fair in standing, as respectable in character, that the majority of these people, all but about 5 per cent., have never been polygamists; that more than a hundred thousand young women and men growing up, many of them now of age, who were educated in the public schools of that country, are opposed to polygamy, and that the prevailing sentiment of the young population of Utah who have been educated as American citizens, who have the rights that I have and that the Senator from Vermont has, is opposed almost unanimously to the institution of polygamy, and that they have consented conscientiously to the legislation of Congress and have done all that they could to enforce it, and propose to make it, so far as they can do so, perpetual and irrevocable. By what right does the Senator from Vermont say here that this is a "sham and a pretense?" On what assumption of truth or reason does he pronounce the protestations of the young men and women of Utah that they are innocent and chaste and desirous of an anti-polygamous society and government a false pretense, a sham, and a fraud?

How vain and idle the objection which the Senator from Vermont seeks to make here, and impose upon the people of this country, that by the law these men can not trammel the State in its future legislation. Suppose that to be so, does that show that they are not sincere? Does that import that the very cruel legislation he himself has constantly forced on these people has had no effect? Why, Mr. President, these attempts to condemn these people in advance, to prejudice them in the public opinion, without a hearing, are idle and unworthy of the Senator from Vermont. They are not reasonable as a matter of logic and not true as a matter of fact.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, after what has been said I should be very much opposed to printing this memorial in the RECORD. It would, I fear, raise false hopes in Utah, and be construed as an expression of opinion that it is possible now to entertain a proposition for the admission of Utah as a State. I regret as much as any one can that Utah is not in a condition to become a State of this Union. She is a near neighbor of my own State; she is a Western Territory; and she has sufficient population and material development to become a State, and it is a very unfortunate thing, very much to be regretted, and no one regrets it more than I do that she is utterly unfit. She is governed by a close corporation, a hierarchy. I do not think there is any such thing as freedom in Utah. Free schools, as we understand them, do not exist. Everything is made subservient to the political organization known as the Mormon Church. Polygamy is but an incident. It is impossible for citizens of the United States to live in any part of Utah outside of the towns where there is military protection. The various modes they have of ridding themselves of gentiles are cruel and unreasonable, the details of which I do not propose to relate at present. I would hate to give a vote which would in any way hasten the admission of Utah as a State until her people are really prepared to establish a free government, establish a government wherein citizens of the United States of all denominations may reside in peace and be protected.

We do not want to admit Utah with this weak promise that she will abolish polygamy, without any evidence that she will abolish her organization that governs that people with a rod of iron, and excludes other citizens from living among them. It is an astonishing fact that an oligarchy of that kind should be set up in the heart of the country in utter hostility to the rest of the United States. They have proselyted the poor and the ignorant from all parts of the world, and they have taught them that the United States is their greatest enemy. I have, during the last thirty years, from time to time attended their churches and heard them preach the doctrine that their church should govern the earth, particularly the United States, and that the United States would be destroyed. They have taught that doctrine and they have exercised political power with that view. A generation has grown up thoroughly hostile to the Government of the United States in the heart of the country; and until there can be such a change as will give them freedom and good government, and until those people can learn to become citizens of the United States in good faith and respect that Government, I should think it a great calamity to have them placed in a position where they can change their constitution at will and perpetuate an organization hostile to this Government, hostile to liberty, founded upon a pretended hierarchy, and I am opposed to any vote that will at this time give countenance to the idea that the people of Utah are fit to become a State.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I deprecate any discussion in regard to what Utah is or is not. These people deny the statement of the Senator from Nevada. They have a right to be heard. They ask that proof be taken as to whether or not they are a loyal people and sincere, as to whether they are hostile to the people of the United States or not. They ask the poor privilege of being heard and allowed to prove their true status, and not to be condemned in advance, without evidence, upon prejudice. That is the question upon which I have been speaking. That is the motion which I have made. I am defending, sir, the right of an American citizen to a fair trial and to a fair hearing, and that he shall not be condemned in the Congress of the United States without a hearing and without proof.

They deny all the statements of the Senator from Nevada, and I have heard them denied, as I said before, by Republicans of the highest intelligence and by Democrats within the last few days. In regard to these facts I have not expressed any opinion of my own. If the Senator from Nevada is right, then it becomes simply a question whether we have the constitutional power and right to deny the principles of the Government and the great proposition upon which all our institutions rest, whether public opinion under our institutions and our Government is the true and safe basis of local self-government, or whether a central and concentrated authority in the hands of a small number of persons shall prescribe the domestic institutions and the religion of a people—an anti-Mormon hierarchy, of which the Senator from Vermont shall be the high priest and apostle, to make war upon and suppress the Mormon hierarchy with fire and sword—or whether we shall rely on the principles of our Government and the presumed power of Christ's religion and His ministers to accomplish the result.

I have not expressed an opinion even on this subject. I will agree with the Senator that, as a matter of expediency, if what he says is true these people are not like other American citizens; but if what they say is true, and what other citizens of the United States of character and consideration say, and what people from Europe who have testified on this subject say is true, then the Senator from Nevada is wrong. He is condemning these people upon facts which do not exist and denying to them virtues and qualities which they possess. This he denies to them without a hearing and without proof, and he asks that they shall not have the rights of American citizens on this judgment in advance.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I am somewhat surprised that this matter should have excited so much zeal and interest as it seems to have excited this morning, for it appears to me that it is not a question of whether Utah shall be admitted as a State which we are considering here, but that the only question is whether memorials of citizens should be printed at length in the RECORD. I know of no reason why the memorial of some citizens who undertake to hold what they call a constitutional convention, or a convention to adopt a constitution in the Territory of Utah, should be printed in the RECORD more than the memorials of any other citizens who petition Congress.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. CALL. The Senator says that he knows of no reason why the memorial of some citizens who have undertaken to hold what they call a constitutional convention should be published in the RECORD any more than the memorial of any other citizen. That is what I understand him to say. I will ask the Senator if he does not recognize the fact that 200,000 people, having a peculiar situation, being subject to the most severe penal laws and processes of law more than the law itself, more than any other people are subject to—whether that does not constitute a difference between them and some other one man or two men who are only interested in some mere personal matter. I ask if he does not conceive that this is a matter of public policy, touching peculiar conditions and affecting large bodies of people, and if these are not reasons why the case is differentiated from that of one or two or a dozen men who present a petition or memorial in some personal matter.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator's question is somewhat long, Mr. President; but without entering into a discussion of the condition of affairs in Utah, I simply remark in passing that the Senator may be mistaken in supposing that only 5 per cent. of the people of Utah are under the terrible imposition of the legislation of Congress, or there are no two hundred thousand citizens who are anxious to be heard. But the question is whether a memorial of this sort should go in the RECORD. It has been many times discussed here that the RECORD was too voluminous. Resolutions have been introduced that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD should be confined to an actual transcript of the proceedings of the two Houses; and if not passed, such a resolution has, I think, met the sanction not only of a majority but of almost all the members of the Senate. It has been customary to allow the printing of memorials of State Legislatures in the RECORD, not, as I understand, by any rule of the Senate, but upon the theory that they represented the views of the States. Thus it has become a part of Senatorial comity, so to speak, that the memorials of Legislatures should be printed in the RECORD when asked for by the person presenting them, but beyond that I know of no rule or practice which will justify the printing of this memorial in the RECORD.

It seems to me a little strange that this particular thing should be made so much of and the claim set up that it is denying the right of petition when the Senate will not allow a petition to be printed at full length in the RECORD. The rule, as I understand it, forbids even the reading of a petition at length. The rule is that the Senator presenting it shall make a brief statement of the prayer of the petition. You might as well say that the right of petition is denied in every instance when a petition is presented here and it is asked that it should go at full length in the RECORD, and the Senate, for the purpose of keeping the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD within the limits which it ought to occupy, denies the right to have it printed at length in the RECORD.

I do not admit the right, if it be put upon that ground, of any number of the citizens of the United States to have their memorials printed in the RECORD. We have had, I think, the petitions of more than 200,000 women in the land, asking for legislation looking to the right of female suffrage in the United States. I do not know but that some of those memorials have been printed in the RECORD; but if it were put upon the ground of right, I should stand here and say there was no right that it should be printed in the RECORD, and it was no denial of the right of petition that the Senate refused to put it in the RECORD. More than 200,000 people have petitioned Congress time and time again on very many subjects, but this is the first time, I think, that it has ever been claimed that because an objection was made to printing those memorials or any of them in the RECORD, that the right of petition and the right of being heard was denied!

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, may I inquire what the pending motion is in respect to this memorial?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Vermont to refer the resolution to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. HARRIS. I thought it certainly could not be the motion to print, because I understand the Senator from Florida read the memorial as part of his remarks, and thereby put it in the RECORD.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, I do not propose at this stage of the session to embark in any discussion of this question of the application of Utah for admission into the Union. I desire simply to correct a statement or two made by the Senator from Florida.

The Senator said that this memorial comes from 200,000 people of the Territory of Utah. That is a mistake. The whole population of the Territory of Utah is 200,000. The Mormons of all kinds are about 140,000. The remainder are what are known as gentiles. They are not Mormons at all; nor did any of them in any way participate in the concoction or presentation here of this State scheme.

Then, as to the Mormons of all kinds, my friend says that only 3 per cent. of the gentlemen who present this memorial here are polygamists. I assert that there are not 3 per cent. who are not polygamists so far as the indorsement of the doctrine of polygamy is concerned. There are a good many who, under the circumstances of their situation, have not gone into polygamy; but there are not, in my opinion, and I speak with the confidence of an intimate knowledge of the situation in Utah, 3 per cent. of all those who stand behind this petition for the admission of Utah as a State into the Union who do not believe that polygamy is the result of a Divine revelation and that it is their duty to maintain it. While they may not have gone into polygamy themselves, they have aided and abetted others who have gone into it, and aided and abetted in maintaining the institution itself against the law and the prosecution of offenses under the law.

Mr. President, I ask the Secretary to read a passage from the last annual report of the Utah Commission, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

If Utah should be admitted into the Union as a State, the following result would follow, namely: There would be an immediate cessation of all further prosecutions for polygamy and unlawful cohabitation under laws of Congress. No prosecution for polygamy would ever take place in the State, until the ruling power in the State chose to do what they now arraign the Government for—"persecute" for a crime which is "an essential part of their religion." This claim has been set forth in a formal way which has made it a solemn declaration of the whole Mormon population of Utah. At a general conference held at Logan, April 6, 1885, a resolution was adopted and a committee appointed to draft a protest and address to the President and people of the United States. Such address was adopted at a mass meeting, held May 2, 1885, at which the Hon. John T. Caine, Delegate from the Territory, presided, and was deputed as the agent to present the same. In that document is formally proclaimed—

"As to our religious faith, it is based upon evidence which to our minds is conclusive; convictions not to be destroyed by legislative enactments or judicial decisions. Force may enslave the body, but it can not convince the mind. To yield at the demand of the legislature or judge the rights of conscience would prove us recreant to every duty we owe to God and man. Among the principles of our religion is that of immediate revelation from God; one of the doctrines so revealed is celestial or plural marriage, for which ostensibly we are stigmatized and hated. This is a vital part of our religion, the decisions of courts to the contrary notwithstanding."

It is a circumstance worthy of mention that Mr. Caine, who bore so prominent a part in the adoption and promulgation of the address from which the above extract was made, was also the president of the convention which adopted the proposed State constitution.

Mr. PADDOCK. I have only to say in addition that the most prominent and conspicuous men who speak for the church and act for the church in all important matters were in that conference and directed the proceedings to which that report, made two years ago to the Senate of the United States, refers, and the same men were in this so-called convention that framed the constitution and prepared this memorial now before the Senate. Certainly these men have met with no change of heart; but suddenly it was concluded that it was better for them to get out from under the control of the Federal Government, believing if this could be done, and they could get the sovereign power of a State for Utah in their own hands through statehood, there would be no trouble in circumventing the Federal Government, nullifying its laws on the system of polygamy, to the end that the system of polygamy in that Territory should be perpetuated.

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the resolution lie on the table.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion for a moment.

Mr. BLAIR. This is likely to encumber the RECORD indefinitely. The Senator has already secured the printing of his memorial by reading it, and this matter is delaying the proceedings of the Senate.

Mr. CALL. I only wish to say a word to correct what has been said.

Mr. BLAIR. I will withdraw the motion for a moment.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Nebraska said that I had stated there were only 3 per cent. of Mormons who were practically polygamists. I wish to say that I said nothing of that kind. I have not stated anything or any opinion on this subject. I do not know anything about the facts. I have stated what these people state and what other credible persons state, and I have asked permission for them to prove this before the Senate. They say that there is not over 3 per cent. in the Territory of the whole population who have ever been polygamists, and they ask permission to prove that fact. I will not say whether that is the same or a greater proportion than may be found among other communities—Vermont or Nebraska or other States. I have no doubt that our people in all the States are very much alike, and that there is, perhaps, as large a proportion of immorality in this respect as 3 per cent. in many of our communities.

I am opposed to polygamy. I am opposed to all forms of superstition, whether it be called religion or not. I believe in the old evangelical churches, the Baptists, Methodists, Catholics, Presbyterians, and others. I venerate their teachings and respect and honor their ministers. I do not profess to know anything about the condition of things in Utah of my own knowledge. I have made no statement of it, and I make none here. I stated what was the opinion and statement of men of character and intelligence upon this subject. I do not think any one believes that if 200,000 men and women of Connecticut were to ask that any petition of theirs should be printed in the RECORD that we should hear the Senator from Connecticut arguing that they were not a legislature, and that there was no rule of the Senate for it. This is hair-splitting of the worst kind.

Now, Mr. President, this memorial having been read, and not desiring to provoke any further contention of the matter, I will withdraw the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be considered as withdrawn if there be no objection.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 12, being Senate bill No. 371.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 371.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to inquire whether the Senator expects to get a final vote on this bill to-day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear what the bill is. Let the title be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be read at the desk.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. BLAIR. I will say in reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Alabama that I shall be very glad indeed, if we are able to do so, to take up the bill and proceed as far as we can to-day. Of course a bill of this importance can not be pressed against the courtesy and wishes of the Senate, if there are members of the body who desire to be heard at length, but I should hope we might complete the consideration of the bill before adjournment to-day.

Mr. MORGAN. The bill has received an amendment in the committee. I do not know what the amendment is.

Mr. BLAIR. A mere verbal amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know about that. It is also accompanied by a report which I have not had time to read. The report and bill were laid on our desks this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will observe that under the rules a motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill between the hours of 1 and 2 must be decided without debate.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not propose to debate the question. I desire to make a suggestion to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire, because I know this is not a debatable proposition, whether this is the bill. I should like to know whether this large pamphlet or volume laid on our desks to-day, "The Education Bill," is the bill we are asked to take up.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill is in the Senator's file.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I have been in favor of the educational bill, but I am not in favor of passing books as bills.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senate, I think, understands the distinction. I ask for a vote.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama will be considered entitled to the floor if there be no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he expects the Senate to come to a vote before the recess. There are several new Senators on both sides of the Chamber who are desirous of investigating this question, I suppose. I should like very much that some opportunity for the consideration of this measure should be given before it is pressed to a final vote.

Mr. GRAY. With the permission of the Senator from New Hampshire, I desire to say that there are a number of Senators on this side of the Chamber who wish to speak upon the bill when it is considered by the Senate. I for one desire to say something in regard to the bill, and I know of others who desire to be heard in regard to it, but none of whom, as I am informed, are ready or care to engage in the debate before the holidays. It will be impossible for some of these Senators to prepare themselves properly to express what they desire to express in regard to the bill before the recess. I therefore join with the Senator from Alabama in the hope that the bill will not be taken up now.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to be understood in what I said in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama, that there will be no purpose to press the bill contrary to the usual courtesies of the Senate. They are, as I understand, that any member desiring to speak shall have the opportunity to be heard.

I desire to call up the bill and proceed as far as may be to-day, and if the whole day is occupied then resume its consideration to-morrow; but I apprehend from the suggestions of Senators that the ultimate disposition of the bill will be postponed. It will be entirely satisfactory, I think, to the friends of the bill to postpone it to the day to which the Senate may adjourn, and that it be the unfinished business on that day.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BUTLER. Like my friend from Alabama and my friend from Delaware I may have some observations to submit upon this measure, and I trust the Senator from New Hampshire will not undertake to railroad it through the Senate. I trust that he will allow it to take the usual course of important measures before this body. For one, it is just possible, I think probable, that I shall have a substitute to offer for the bill, which I believe will meet the approval of a majority of the Senate; at least I hope so; and I have not had the time to prepare that substitute. I can see no reason why this bill should be taken up at this time and given a preference when it can just as well be taken up when the Senate meets on the 4th of January, or on whatever day it shall meet after the holidays. I hope the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire will be withdrawn. I am not inclined and do not intend to make any mere factious opposition to the measure, but am entirely sincere when I say that it requires discussion, will have discussion, and it had better come up in the regular course of business after the holidays.

Mr. REAGAN. I trust that the Senator from New Hampshire will not press the consideration of this bill at present. It is at best a bill of doubtful constitutionality and of doubtful expediency. Many Senators, if its consideration comes up now, will not have had an opportunity of examining the subject. I trust the measure will be allowed to take its course and come up at such time as will allow the proper consideration of it.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to make a statement? I do not wish to be misunderstood in regard to this bill. If this is the original educational bill, I am for it. If the Senator will not allow me to know whether it is or not, I shall vote for postponement. If he will allow me to make my statement, it may make a difference of one vote.

Mr. BLAIR. I think the Senator had better make his statement.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. My statement, then, is this: that this [holding up a document] is not a bill at all, and I object to it because it has two pages of remarks made by the Senators on this floor in advocacy of the bill after it had once passed the Senate. If there is to be a bill introduced into the Senate it ought to be one without such a preface as this, such a preface as is to bear out men in making statements that the records of the Forty-ninth Congress and the Forty-seventh Congress show to be untrue. If you are passing an educational bill, then I say do not put into it that which the records of Congress show to be untrue. That is the objection I have to this bill. I am for it as an original proposition; I have voted for it from its inception; I have made my remarks on it; I could introduce these two records on it; but I am not willing to vote for two pages of preface here that are made up of records made two years after the bill had passed and speeches made after the bill had passed.

Now, sir, I say I am not prepared to vote for this thing to be called a bill when it is a CONGRESSIONAL RECORD ex post facto. I want the Blair educational bill, but I want that and that alone, with such amendments as judgment and experience shall suggest to it; but this part of it here I will never vote for, because it is not true.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I say to the Senator that he is laboring under a misapprehension, and a moment's conference between us will satisfy him of that fact. The bill has been introduced in the usual form, referred to the committee, and reported back to the Senate in the exact language in which it passed the Senate during the last Congress by a vote of 36 to 11, including, as I am happy to say, the vote of my friend from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER]. That is the bill which, being introduced in the Senate and referred to the committee, has been reported back to the Senate unanimously, with the exception of a slight amendment of a single section. That is the bill. The Senator is laboring under a misapprehension in regard to the collection of data, documentary and tabulated, laid on the tables of Senators to-day.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I beg the Senator's pardon. That was the charge brought against me only two or three days ago in my Legislature, and I have the RECORD here to show that I am right about it, and I challenge him and the men who brought the allegation against me down there to deny it. I have the RECORD here, and I am only waiting for an opportunity to hurl it right into the teeth of this Senate and let it be known that it is the truth and who is the champion of the measure.

Mr. BLAIR. The motion is to proceed to the consideration of the bill. I ask for action on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which has been read? The motion is not debatable, but the Chair understands that the debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAIR. By consent, according to the usual courtesy of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BLAIR. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAWES (when Mr. HOAR's name was called). My colleague [Mr. HOAR] has been called away from the Senate. I think he is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. My colleague, if here, I am sure, would vote "yea."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee has already voted.

Mr. DAWES. I call the attention of the senior Senator from Tennessee. I understood from my colleague that he was paired with the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no recollection of it, but if the Senator's colleague has absented himself with any such understanding, I shall certainly observe it.

Mr. DAWES. I may be mistaken in the Senator, but my colleague told me he was paired with some one.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall certainly respect any understanding the Senator's colleague may have had, but I have no recollection of having heard a word on the subject.

Mr. DAWES. He has gone away with the impression that he is paired with somebody.

Mr. HARRIS. If it shall turn out that he is not paired with some other Senator, I shall take care of his pair.

Mr. DAWES. That is satisfactory.

Mr. PUGH. I desire to state that I am paired with the colleague of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. I remember now that it was the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present he would vote "yea." I vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HEARST. I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] on political questions. I did not regard this as a political question. If it is a political question I will withdraw my vote, and if not I will let it stand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California must decide that question himself.

Mr. HEARST. I do not believe that it is political.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 15; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that the bill and report be read; and then I shall have no objection to doing whatever is convenient to the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will not do any good to read the bill just now. It will have to be read over again when it is taken up for debate. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senate have any objection to printing the bill with the report in the RECORD?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I object if it means this book.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will not do any good just now. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask, first, my privilege to object to the printing of the bill, if this is what it means.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not object to printing the bill, but I object to printing this book again.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask the Senator from Vermont to withdraw his motion, to permit me to present a report as to a resolution to print.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I yield for that purpose.

PRINTING ADDITIONAL COPIES OF BILLS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back a resolution to print extra copies of a bill favorably, and move that it be adopted. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That 1,000 extra copies of Senate bill No. 945, to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, and rinderpest among cattle, and to facilitate the exportation of cattle and the products of live-stock, and for other purposes, be printed.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution to print 10,000 extra copies of Senate bill No. 977, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That 10,000 extra copies of Senate bill No. 977, to regulate the importation of foreign merchandise and to secure uniformity in the classification and valuation thereof, and for other purposes, be printed in pamphlet form, 2,000 of which shall be for the use of the Committee on Finance and 8,000 for the use of the Senate.

THE CIVILIZED INDIAN TRIBES.

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate, who shall be charged with the duty of inquiring into and reporting upon the relations of the five civilized tribes of Indians to the Government of the United States; to investigate the condition of said tribes, and whether it is desirable and advisable to make the members of said tribes citizens of the United States, with leave to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. TELLER. I object. Let it be printed. I should like to see it in print.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution lies over under the rule, and will be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I renew my motion for an executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After nineteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 40 minutes p.m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 21, at 12 o'clock m.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN MISSOURI.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the United States Fish Commission is hereby directed to report to the Senate at as early a day as practicable what measures, if any, have been taken for the selection of a site for and the location of a fish-cultural station of the United States Fish Commission in the Ozark region of Southwest Missouri, with the views and recommendations of the Commission, and the probable cost thereof.

CREDENTIALS OF SENATORS.

Mr. SPOONER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas it is in the highest degree desirable that the credentials evidencing the election of United States Senators by the Legislatures of the several States should be as far as practicable free from technical objection as to the form thereof; and

Whereas the Congress has, pursuant to the power vested in it by the Constitution, regulated by act the time and the manner of the election of Senators in the several States, rendering it practicable that credentials of election under said act should be uniform in character: Now therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and it is hereby, instructed to consider the expediency of the adoption by the Senate for the guidance of the executives of the several States, of a form or forms of credential conforming to the provisions of the Federal law regulating the time and manner of electing United States Senators, the said committee to report by bill or otherwise.

THE CIVILIZED INDIAN TRIBES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from yesterday, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. BUTLER, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate, who shall be charged with the duty of inquiring into and reporting upon the relations of the five civilized tribes of Indians to the Government of the United States; to investigate the condition of said tribes, and whether it is desirable and advisable to make the members of said tribes citizens of the United States, with leave to report by bill or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to this resolution?

The resolution was agreed to.

REDUCTION OF POSTAGE RATES.

Mr. BECK. If it is in order, I ask that the resolution offered by me on the 12th instant, and laid on the table, be taken up for the purpose of having it referred. It is Miscellaneous Document No. 8.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky asks the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a resolution which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be, and it is hereby, directed to inquire into the advisability of reducing the rate of postage to 1 cent on all mail matter now known as first-class which does not exceed 1 ounce in weight, and a proportionate reduction on all excess of 1 ounce, and report to the Senate by bill or otherwise as soon as practicable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I desire to say only a word in regard to the matter.

I announced the other day that I would prepare a bill looking to the accomplishment of this object, but upon examination I found it required a thorough examination of the present relations of the third and fourth class postmasters, about which there is a good deal of trouble now, and that a change of postage would involve still further investigation of the proper adjustment of their compensation. Looking over quite a number of other things connected with the matter, I found that it would be better that the resolution should go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, so that they could carefully prepare a bill themselves after consultation with the Postmaster-General. Therefore I ask that the resolution may be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

COMMISSIONER OF FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to call up for consideration at the present time Order of Business No. 10, being the bill (S. 261) to amend the law concerning the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries. It will take but a moment. I presume it will lead to no debate.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not understand that consent to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts interferes with the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will come before the Senate at the hour of——

Mr. BLAIR. Will the unfinished business come up at 1 or 2 o'clock, under the present state of the rules?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would hold that the unfinished business comes before the Senate at the hour of 2 o'clock, unless otherwise ordered by the Senate. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Let the bill be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4395 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a person of scientific and practical acquaintance with the fish and fisheries of the coast to be a Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and he shall receive a salary at the rate of $5,000 a year, and he shall be removable at the pleasure of the President. Said Commissioner shall not hold any other office or employment under the authority of the United States or any State."

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the Senator from Massachusetts explain what change is proposed by the bill in the existing law.

Mr. DAWES. The section of the Revised Statutes proposed to be amended is in these words:

SEC. 4395. There shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among the civil officers or employés of the Government, a commissioner of fish and fisheries, who shall be a person of proved scientific and practical acquaintance with the fishes of the coast, and who shall serve without additional salary.

This section was enacted when the propagating of food fish was an experiment, and began upon a very small scale. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] will recollect that the service had its origin in a $5,000 appropriation contained in an appropriation bill at one time originating in the other House. It has grown to very considerable dimensions, and has been productive of immense good. It originated at the suggestion of that great enthusiast and scientific man, Professor Baird, who has lately died, whose anxiety to push it through was so great that he offered to take the labor upon himself without any additional compensation to that which he was receiving as Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution. He sacrificed his life in that work, and it has become of such dimensions that it is wholly impracticable to continue it in that connection. It is so much that it calls for the entire time of some scientific man, and it is for that purpose that upon advisement of those largely interested, as well as the officials of the Government, this bill has been drawn to establish the office of commissioner separate from the Smithsonian Institution, to be filled of course by such scientific man as has heretofore been called into that service; and without doubt the President will be able to find such a man to fill the place.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he objects to striking out the words "of the coast." That language is found in the Revised Statutes, and yet we know that in the practical conduct of this bureau or department of the public service the operations of the Fish Commission have not been confined to the coast, and very properly so.

Mr. DAWES. Most certainly I agree to strike out the words.

Mr. VEST. Then I will make that motion. I have no objection to the bill if that clause is stricken out.

Mr. DAWES. It has grown beyond the coast and has developed on the lakes and in other portions of the country, quite as desirable a work as on the coast, where it was originally attempted.

Mr. VEST. That is true, Mr. President, and practically all the Western rivers have been stocked with very valuable fish.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 8, after the word "fisheries," it is proposed to strike out "of the coast," so as to read:

That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a person of scientific and practical acquaintance with the fish and fisheries to be a Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and he shall receive a salary at the rate of $5,000 a year, and he shall be removable at the pleasure of the President.

Mr. MITCHELL. I was about to call for the reading of the report when the Senator from Missouri interposed. I certainly should have objected to the bill as originally introduced, but as proposed to be amended I am in favor of it. The fisheries of the Columbia River and of the Western coast generally have become of immense importance. Since the commencement of that industry, twenty-two years ago, over $45,000,000 worth of canned fish have been shipped from the Columbia River alone.

Mr. DAWES. That phrase came into the law when the whole idea was an experiment, and it was proposed to try it on the coast. Practically that limitation has been disregarded. As the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Missouri know, the original effort has been extended to the lakes and the large rivers with equal success.

Mr. PLUMB. I simply want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts to explain what he meant by saying that the former Fish Commissioner had sacrificed his life in the performance of the duties of this office?

Mr. DAWES. I did not mean that literally; I meant that owing to the many duties which had fallen upon this scientific enthusiast, among them largely these matters of the fisheries, everybody, I believe, is of opinion that his life was shortened.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I do not propose to oppose this bill, but I desire to call the attention of the Senate, and the Senator from Massachusetts particularly, to the fact that while it proposes to appoint a commissioner (and he ought to be paid, I agree, and paid well, because it is a very important work), the whole system has grown up, as was very well said, out of a small appropriation. It is not regulated by any well-defined laws or system or responsibility, and the committees which have to deal with it and furnish the money to run it are constantly at sea to know by what authority this work is done. After the commissioner is appointed this bill ought to be supplemented by a bill defining the duties of that position, so that there will be some law and some responsibility, and not have it go on from year to year as it is now, without anything except what the committees seem to think it best to do. So long as Professor Baird lived the matter was under very good control, I admit, because he knew it from the beginning, and I do not think he ever asked for any service that was not required; but it is a loose way to have a thing running.

Mr. DAWES. Out of some such legislation as this there ought to come just what the Senator has suggested, but it would be more likely to come from the appointment of a man who would devote his whole time and his whole thought to this work than it would by continuing it attached to some other office as an adjunct and as a subordinate position.

Mr. REAGAN. Is the bill open to amendment at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment is pending. An amendment to that amendment would be in order.

Mr. DAWES. If there is no objection, let the pending amendment be adopted.

Mr. REAGAN. The amendment I propose is to be offered to another part of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri be agreed to?

Mr. CALL. I desire to know whether the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is designed to eliminate the coast from the operation of the bill?

Mr. VEST. Not at all. It extends it.

Mr. CALL. Then I have no objection to the amendment. I merely wish to say that this is a very important interest to the State of Florida, and one inuring to the benefit of the Federal Government. Our coast fisheries are of immense value.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to amend the bill, in line 10, before the word "thousand," by striking out the word "five" and inserting the word "three;" so as to read:

And he shall receive a salary at the rate of $3,000 a year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. I have only a word to say with reference to the amendment. The salary proposed by the bill is higher than a majority of the governors of the States of this Union receive. The duties may very well be performed by any respectable clerk. There is no great intellectual training or qualification necessary for the performance of the duties of Fish Commissioner, and it seems to me that a salary of $3,000 is ample compensation for the office.

Mr. HAMPTON. I think the Senator from Texas is laboring under a mistake. The provision for the salary placed in the bill is precisely what was paid to the assistant fish commissioner, when Mr. Baird, as head of the Smithsonian Institution, received no salary for his work. I differ with the Senator from Texas altogether in his statement that the place does not require a man thoroughly familiar with all the details not only of propagating and hatching fish, but a man of scientific attainments. I do not think a salary of $5,000 is at all too high, and I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

Mr. DOLPH. I move to take up the joint resolution (S. R. 2) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering Congress to legislate upon the subjects of marriage and divorce, and prohibiting bigamy and polygamy. I desire to take up the joint resolution merely for the purpose of submitting some remarks upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the joint resolution will be considered as before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The Senator from Oregon is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. Pending that I ask the Senator from Oregon to yield to me that I may call up the resolution of the House of Representatives in respect to the holiday adjournment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield for that purpose?

Mr. DOLPH. I do.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the concurrent resolution adopted by the House of Representatives regarding the holiday recess. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, December 22, 1887, they stand adjourned until Wednesday, January 4, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I objected to the consideration of this resolution yesterday because I thought there was no reason why we should depart from the usual custom in our haste to get away from the discharge of public duties. I thought if we were to leave our post of duty at this time without any adequate excuse we at least ought to so resolve with the deliberation which characterizes the Senate in the passage of legislation.

I shall vote against the resolution because I think it is against the public interest that we should adjourn at this time. This session will continue until the dog-days, greatly to our discomfort, and during the latter part of the session the country will be in the midst of a heated Presidential canvass, which will distract the attention of the Senators from the discharge of their duties, and will make the closing weeks of the session unprofitable to the public, although perhaps necessary because of the fact that we shall have been dilatory in the mean time.

I do not believe there is any reason why we should adjourn over the holidays. I do not think one out of a half-dozen of all the members of Congress will go home during the holidays, although that is the pretense under which the resolution is to be adopted. Of those living west of the Ohio very few will go home.

This is the time of the year when we can best do the business which we have come here to do. It is a time when the members are fresh and vigorous, and when they are certainly as free from distraction from outside as they could be at any time, and if there is any spare time it had better be taken next summer, at the period when there will be enough to look after on account of the many things which will take our attention away from the business of legislation.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] introduced a resolution some days ago in which he asked the Senate to resolve that it would not adjourn finally until it had done something about the surplus in the Treasury, referring, no doubt, to the admonitions of the President of the United States in his message on that very important subject. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] suggests that that was Pickwickian; but it was of sufficient importance to be mentioned and to be in fact the sole subject of discussion by the President in his last message.

I do not agree with the President in many of the statements which he has made, and I do not at all agree with him in saying that if any trouble is caused by the surplus in the Treasury it will be because of the non-action of Congress. We should remain here, however, during the holidays and legislate upon the subject treated in the message along with others, which are pressing for attention, but not with the view that Congress is responsible for a condition of affairs which threatens disaster, if, indeed, trouble is impending. The primary responsibility for the present condition of the Treasury rests with the President. He has chosen to totally disregard the law which authorizes and practically requires him to spend the money in the Treasury beyond the needs of the Government for current administration in the payment or in the purchase of the national debt. The excuse which he makes for this refusal is because the law is embodied in an appropriation act, and by reason of its being found there he says it is perhaps doubtful if it was intended as anything but a temporary expedient.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury may at any time apply the surplus money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as he may consider proper, to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds: Provided, That the bonds so purchased or redeemed shall constitute no part of the sinking fund, but shall be canceled. (Act approved March 3, 1881.)

I do not know of any warrant on the part of the President to distinguish between the laws which are passed by Congress, and to say that one provision is less mandatory upon him than another. I do not think that it comes with very good grace from him to criticise the particular place where important provisions of law are found. It is enough to say that this particular law was passed and approved as all laws are; and if the President shall choose to disregard all provisions of law which are found in appropriation acts, and which he don't happen to approve of, he will be found to have a pretty large contract on his hands, and one which may result somewhat disastrously to him.

He omitted, also, to state one very important fact, and that is, that when Congress passed a law affirmatively requiring him to pay out $10,000,000 a month in the discharge of the public debt (and it was done with a degree of complacency which disgusted me considerably, in the precise shape which he indicated and distinctly said would be acceptable to him), he conveniently stuck it in his pocket, did not approve it, and it did not become a law.

Mr. BECK. But he did pay it out faster than Congress required.

Mr. PLUMB. That is only another way of saying that he don't want to be hampered or controlled by the law. He had, besides, the admonition of the Senator's speech to prompt him. The President happens to think that he knows more about this matter than Congress does, and the question of the existence or non-existence of a statute is nothing to him. He means to do as he pleases, statute or no statute, and if unpleasant consequences come to the country because of his failure to obey the law, he proposes to unload the responsibility upon Congress.

Sir, if a Republican President had done what a Democratic President has done, there would be talk of impeachment on that side of the Chamber. When I think of the denunciations that I have heard of national banks, and about the craven submission of the Government to the interests of those banks under Republican administration, I think with some degree of complacency of what has occurred since a Democratic administration came into power. I wonder if my friend from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who has made the welkin ring all over that good old State, which he so ably represents, in denunciations of the national banks as vampires sucking the substance of the people, did not smite himself when he saw a Democratic President come in and bring with him the president of a national bank as Secretary of the Treasury and the cashier of another national bank as United States Treasurer.

The administration is not only refusing to purchase bonds, but it is depositing $40,000,000 of this alleged surplus in the Treasury with national banks, to be by them lent to the people. The public money is, therefore, being used to swell the profit of the banks and put new burdens upon the borrowing public instead of paying it out on the bonded debt, and saving the Government interest, and giving the money to the people without price.

I think this costs the people some three or four million dollars a year, and enriches the banks by that amount. The President seems to be confident of his legal authority to thus favor the banks at the expense of the people. He says the last purchases of 4½ per cent. bonds were made at a premium of 8 per cent. They are selling now in the market at a premium of about 7 per cent. As they mature in September, 1891, the rate of interest yielded to the Government by the purchase now would be 2½ per cent.

The President, in his eagerness to put the responsibility upon Congress for the Treasury surplus, not only ignores his duty under existing law, but he forgets to take note of the fact also that a river and harbor bill, which appropriated $12,000,000 or $15,000,000 of the surplus, failed to become a law, not because of any lack of action on the part of Congress. He might have said, if he would not thereby have been trampling upon his own party's toes, that a deficiency bill which carried $8,000,000 expenditures, failed because of the neglect of duty on the part of the majority representing his party in the House of Representatives. The addition of $12,000,000 by means of the expenditures for rivers and harbors and $8,000,000 in paying the debt which the Government owes would have made a very considerable addition to the current funds of the people of the United States at this juncture, and reduced the surplus correspondingly. If he had been candid he would have also stated that several millions more would have been paid out to disabled ex-Union soldiers justly entitled to the same if he had signed the disabled soldiers' pension bill passed at the last session of Congress.

I have never wholly agreed with the policy of the Treasury Department under Republican administrations. There was this to be said about it, that in the matter of the payment of the public debt it was regular and uniform in its operations, and was not under the suspicion of being influenced by banking or other private interests. As fast as $10,000,000 came into the Treasury it was paid out in the discharge of the public debt. It never congested there until $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 were on hand, and then emptied at once in order to meet a condition of things existing in what is known as "the street." It never was paid out after consultation with banking officers in New York City, nor to meet local conditions existing there. However much the Republican Administration may have been criticised in other respects, at least it was not liable to that criticism which will lie at the door of the present Administration.

Mr. President, the trouble with this Administration is that it has had no eyes for anything in a financial way except where it related to the banking and speculative interests of New York City. It has not taken into account that all this long summer there has been a lack of money necessary for the proper carrying on of business all over the Western and Southern country. It was not until there was a dearth of money in New York City for the carrying of stock and for speculative purposes that money has been paid out. When the New York banks were lacking in funds the Treasury Department had no doubt about the legality of the law authorizing the purchase of bonds, and some seventeen millions of bonds were purchased. Whenever the same condition of things again exists there will be no further doubts about the binding force of the law, and other bonds will be bought to relieve the stringency. Meanwhile the country at large can suffer for the lack of money to properly transact business, while the President pleads his doubt about the law for not doing what was so promptly done to relieve stringency at New York.

The President says such a discretion as this law commits to him ought not to be intrusted to an executive officer, but he has already exercised it in the case mentioned, and it is one which must necessarily be committed to the Executive, as it has been from the beginning of the Government with reference to the public debt in this country. It will not do to say that some executive officer might abuse his discretion. There is the law. It should be obeyed. The President won't claim that he is afraid he will not properly administer it. He is willing enough to have the responsibility when that responsibility is in the line of what seems to be—I will not say his own interest, but the interest of the company that he seeks, as shown by his pocket veto of the Morrison surplus resolution. When there was trouble, or liability to trouble, in Wall street, there was no question then about the exercise of Executive discretion in the disposal of nineteen or twenty millions in the purchase of bonds; but the moment the stricture there was removed there was no further exercise of that discretion, and no further disbursement made; and so $140,000,000 of the people's money beyond all Treasury needs is hoarded and kept out of circulation.

Mr. President, it is not exactly germane to this branchof the subject, and yet, in the line of what I have said about the disregard of the law by the President, I desire to call attention to the fact that one of the last bills signed by Mr. Arthur, when President of the United States, an Indian appropriation bill, contained a provision requiring the President to begin, carry on, and conclude negotiations with certain Indian tribes in the Indian Territory for the cession of the interest of those tribes in lands which it was desired by Congress to open to settlement. That provision was in the following words, and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] will remember the controversy there was about its enactment, how strenuously he and I and others labored in order that it might be enacted, so that the land under consideration might be opened to homestead settlement:

That the President is hereby authorized to open negotiations with the Creeks, Seminoles, and Cherokees for the purpose of opening to settlement under the homestead laws the unassigned lands in said Indian Territory ceded by them respectively to the United States by the several treaties of August 11, 1866, March 21, 1866, and July 19, 1866; and for that purpose the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; his action hereunder to be reported to Congress.

I ask the Secretary to read from the report of the Secretary of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, that part of the report which refers to this provision of the statutes, and which sets forth the reasons why the President of the United States did not proceed to carry out the mandate of Congress, and which is unexecuted to this day.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

OKLAHOMA.

By the third article of the treaty of August 16, 1866 (14 Stat., 766), it is stipulated that "in compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon, the Seminoles cede to the United States their entire domain," consisting of 2,169,080 acres, at the rate of 15 cents per acre.

By the third article of the treaty of August 11, 1866 (ibid., 786), the Creeks, for the same purpose, ceded to the United States the west half of their entire domain, which cession passed 3,402,430 acres, at the rate of 30 cents per acre. The two cessions combined aggregated 5,571,410 acres. The Indians have been paid therefor according to agreement.

In pursuance of the purpose for which these lands were ceded to the United States, portions on the east and the west thereof have been from time to time set apart for and assigned to certain tribes and bands of friendly Indians for their use and occupancy.

That portion of the land remaining unappropriated to the trust provided for in the treaties lies very nearly in the center of the Indian Territory. It is this unappropriated tract that is commonly called the "Oklahoma country." No agent of the Government resides upon this land, and it is not occupied in any way by any person or persons for any purpose under any authority of this Department.

An organized movement by certain persons was begun and set on foot some years past for the forcible possession of and settlement upon these lands under the plea that they formed a part of the public domain and were subject to entry and settlement under the general land laws of the United States. To prevent such unlawful and unauthorized settlements it became necessary for the Executive to issue the proclamations of April 26, 1879, February 12, 1880, and July 1, 1884, defining the status of those lands, and warning all persons against any attempts to go or settle thereupon. It had also been made necessary to use a part of the military force of the United States to remove intruders who had succeeded in getting into that country.

When I assumed charge of this Department it was alleged that certain individuals, associations of persons, and corporations were in the unauthorized possession of portions of the "Oklahoma country," and also that certain other persons and associations were preparing to enter, occupy, and settle upon said lands.

The matter was considered; and the President, on the 13th of March, 1885, issued his proclamation, warning all persons then upon the lands, and those intending, preparing, or threatening to enter and settle upon the same, that they would not be permitted to enter upon that territory or to remain thereon if already there.

The parties claiming the right to enter these lands, alleging them to be public lands, argue that the United States must have understood the treaty with the Seminoles and Creeks, while the meaning and intent thereof was freshly in their mind and knowledge, as restoring the land to the public domain, since by act of Congress of July 27, 1866 (14 Stat., 294)—passed in the same month that the treaties were proclaimed—a right of way with a subsidy of land was granted the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company over a route described which passed through the "Oklahoma country." They claim that by authorizing the use of a portion of the land for railroad purposes the United States admitted that they could be used for other than Indian purposes, and that this must have been conceded by the Indians, who failed to object to its appropriation for railroad purposes.

This argument would hardly have been advanced if the advisers of these parties, or the parties themselves, had carefully read the concluding clause of section 2 of the granting act, which is as follows:

"The United States shall extinguish, as rapidly as may be consistent with public policy and the welfare of the Indians, and only by their voluntary cession, the Indian title to all lands falling under the operation of this act and acquired in the donation to the road named in the act."

For the purposes of this act the Indian title to that portion of the "Oklahoma country" through which the railroad was proposed to be run has not been extinguished. The railroad has not been constructed upon or extended into that territory, and consequently it has not acquired possession nor the right of possession of any portion of those lands under that law.

In the case of the United States v. D. L. Payne, tried in the district court of the United States for the western district of Arkansas, Judge Parker cited the decisions of the Supreme Court in the case of Wilcox v. Jackson (13 Pet., 266), "wherein it is held that whenever a tract of land has been appropriated to the public use it is severed from the mass of the public domain, and subsequent laws of sale are not construed to embrace it, though they do not in terms except it." He also refers to the case of the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Road v. The United States (2 Otto, 733), which affirms the doctrine in Wilcox v. Jackson, and holds further that "this doctrine applies with more force to Indian than to military reservations." Judge Parker then adds:

"I think, therefore, from the authorities I have cited, and from the language of this section, that there is no doubt that this act of Congress has not changed the land in controversy from the condition of a reservation."

Notwithstanding the rulings of the Interior Department, the proclamations of the Executive, and the solemn adjudications of a Federal court of competent jurisdiction over the parties and over the subject matter, upon a clear statement of facts on both sides of the question, all holding that these lands are not a part of the public domain and are not subject to pre-emption and homestead entry under the general land laws of the United States, but, on the contrary, that they are a part of the Indian Territory, that they are not unappropriated lands, but lands dedicated to specific purposes, yet it is to be regretted that repeated attempts have been made to make forcible entry and possession upon said lands.

It has become generally known throughout this country that this large tract of land, fertile, well watered, and with its mild climate, is unoccupied, and that it has continued in this idle condition since the treaties of 1866. It is therefore not surprising that a large class of hardy, industrious people, residing in more thickly settled States, are eager to acquire homesteads upon it.

The respectful petitions of many peaceable and law-abiding citizens from numerous localities throughout the country requesting that it be opened to settlement, no less than the threatened unlawful invasion of the land, have had the effect of inducing consideration of the subject by Congress, which, at its last session, enacted the following provision of law, namely:

"That the President is hereby authorized to open negotiations with the Creeks, Seminoles, and Cherokees for the purpose of opening to settlement under the homestead laws the unassigned lands in said Indian Territory ceded by them respectively to the United States by the several treaties of August 11, 1866, March 21, 1866, and July 19, 1866; and for that purpose the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; his action hereunder to be reported to Congress." (23 Stat., 384.)

This provision of law refers not only to the lands ceded by the Creeks and Seminoles referred to above, but also to lands ceded by the Cherokees, the status of which is considered herein under the title "The Cherokee Outlet."

The unlawful combinations above referred to have rendered it, in my judgment, unwise to appoint this commission. That which gives security to life and property is the spirit of law. Nothing is more dangerous, more fatal to rights of property and personal safety and public order, than a spirit of lawlessness. The manifestations of the latter danger should be checked at all times, until the rule of law becomes the daily rule of conduct for our people.

The lands reserved for the accommodation of the Indians are undoubtedly much larger in extent than is needed for their wants and accommodation. There can be no harm in recognizing the gradual current slowly tending in the direction of civilized occupation and use of the Indian Territory, as the Indians themselves become consolidated upon fewer residental points; but rapacity and lawlessness will not abide the gradual and gentle method of change, and seek by violence and forcible invasion to displace law and treaty and the sense of obligation to both, and ride rough-shod into possession of the lands of the Indian reservations. Will it not be a lesson—valuable there and valuable elsewhere—to show such transgressors that their way is hard, and that nothing will render the Indian occupation more permanent, or postpone the change in the use of these lands longer, than the attempts to invade and by force obtain possession and enjoyment of them? The outlaws and depredators who imagine they can override the law and violate treaty obligations with the Indians will discover the impossibility of success when they find themselves confronted by the law of the land, strengthened by the civil and military arm, and backed by the moral sentiment of a just people.

Mr. PLUMB. It will be observed that the Secretary of the Interior, speaking for the President of the United States, alleges as a reason for not carrying out this law then in force, that there were certain men encamped or otherwise located on the border of the Indian Territory seeking to go over upon these lands. They were persons who claimed that the land belonged to the Government, and that they had a legal right to go upon it; a claim, I have no doubt, they made in perfect sincerity, however much they may have been mistaken. But however their attitude may have been at the time, it has ceased to have any validity, by reason of the fact that almost contemporaneously with the issuing of this report those persons dispersed, and have never since assembled on the border of that Territory or elsewhere, so far as I know, threatening to go into the Indian Territory, or claiming any right whatever to do so; but the President has never carried out that provision of law, has never negotiated with the Indians; and there are millions of acres of fertile land totally unoccupied, and with no Indian claiming any right of possession on them, which have been withheld from settlement through all this period of time; and Congress has practically been estopped from acting, because it can not open the land to settlement until the Indians have ceded their rights, and the Executive is almost, if not quite, a necessary party for the carrying on of such negotiation as may be necessary for the securing of such.

I think it is the duty of the Executive to carry out the laws that Congress makes. It is not the part of the Executive to assume that Congress did not intend that a certain line of policy plainly marked out in the law was not to be carried out. It is within the competence of Congress to say that the revenues of the Government which are in excess of current needs shall be applied in the extinction of the national debt until every dollar has been so extinguished, and to continue the financial policy necessary to that purpose, the views of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

I think it will be much more in keeping with the position and the responsibilities and the duties of that high office for the person who occupies it to at least do what the law requires him to do, leaving the responsibility, whatever it may be, where it would then properly belong.

I do not believe, and never have believed, in accumulating large sums of money in the Treasury. I have urged upon the Senate, and have voted here repeatedly for the cutting down of the surplus to the lowest possible sum. I believe in a poor Treasury and a rich people. I am in favor of putting out every dollar of money as fast as it comes in, first, in the payment of the current obligations of the Government, and second, in the payment of the debt. If the Government would pay more of its debts it would be better, and the revenues can and should be reduced. But reducing the revenues for the future don't dispose of the present surplus. That must be paid out or the people continue to suffer for the lack of it for use in their business. The President makes no suggestion whatever as to how the actual surplus shall be disposed of, his recommendations going wholly to the prevention of its further increase.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I do not propose to enter upon a debate in regard to the President's policy on a motion to adjourn over for the holidays. I assume, with the Senator from Kansas, that the pending resolution will pass. It is the usual recess. I believe there has never been an exception to it. The House of Representatives has always passed such resolutions, and the Senate has always agreed to them. Why on a motion like that, when we have all the next year before us, with no limit to our session, a discussion of the President's policy should be now thrust upon the Senate I can not quite understand.

But there are some things the country ought to know in connection with the statements of the Senator from Kansas. His charges and assertions do not disclose them. One is, that the policy of the Republican party, by imposing and maintaining unnecessarily high taxation, has caused the present surplus to be piled up in the Treasury, and they seem determined to hold it there or waste it upon some pet schemes which they may be able to devise; and the country ought to be advised of the further important fact that the Republican party has so adjusted the time of maturity of the bonds of the United States that they can not be paid with the surplus thus piled up by needless, and therefore unjust, taxation in the Treasury without paying to the bondholders any premium they may see fit to demand. Let us look at the facts.

Their policy postponed the payment of about $750,000,000 of the bonds till 1907, and $250,000,000 of them until 1891. The President has during his administration paid off nearly $200,000,000 of the bonds subject to call—that is, he has paid every dollar of the 3 per cent. bonds, all that were due, and that could by possibility be paid without paying any premium that the bondholders might see fit to ask, and it is obvious that they have the power to raise, as the President very well says, whenever the policy suggested by the Senator from Kansas is adopted, the premiums demanded to any amount they see fit. Perhaps it is because the power exists in the hands of the bondholders to raise the 4 percents from 23 to 27 premium, or from 27 to 40, or from 40 to 50 per cent. that gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber are so very anxious to have the President pay out the money of the people at the rate of $130 or $140 for every hundred dollars of bonded debt we owe.

The Republican party and its financial policy brought the country into its present condition.

The Democratic party, on the other hand, headed by the President of the United States, is endeavoring to reduce taxation, so that the needless surplus shall not reach the Treasury. The Democratic Administration found this condition of things, also, which caused serious alarm. The national banks of which the Senator speaks, and which have been the favored pets of his party during all the time they held power, had become absolute failures for the purpose of furnishing the country with a sufficient currency for the business wants of the people. I put a question to the Comptroller of the Currency the other day relative to the contraction of the bank currency, and received his official answer, which shows that there were $352,000,000, in round numbers, of bonds of the United States deposited four years ago as security for the circulation of the national-bank notes, to wit, on November 1, 1883; and that on November 1, 1887, when 40,000 more miles of railroad had been added to our transportation routes, and the wants of the country were proportionally increasing, those national banks which were held up to us as being a safe means of furnishing sufficient circulation have reduced the bonds to $188,000,000, a reduction in circulation of $164,000,000, when our commerce and the other needs of the country required an increase of at least $100,000,000 or $150,000,000, instead of a contraction of $164,000,000; and because the outstanding notes have not all been returned, though the bonds are withdrawn, there were on the 1st day of November over $102,000,000 of greenbacks locked up in the Treasury to protect the national-bank notes outstanding that were not protected by bonds. The letter of the Comptroller is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, D. C., November 21, 1887.

Hon. JAMES B. BECK, United States Senate:

SIR: In response to your verbal request of this date, I have the honor to inclose herewith a tabulated statement showing—

4. The amount of public moneys in United States depositories at the beginning of business on the 1st day of November of each year from 1883 to 1887, each inclusive, with the yearly decrease or increase of the bonds, circulation, lawful money, and public deposits.

Very respectfully,

* Decrease.

This is a startling exhibit in more aspects than one. What was the President to do? He either had to buy the bonds that were not payable till 1891 and 1907, under the laws which had been passed by the political friends of the Senator from Kansas, and which could not be repealed, or lock the money up in the Treasury, or leave it with the United States depositaries to be loaned out to the people so as to keep it in circulation. Any horn of the dilemma was bad. All resulted from Republican legislation. The banks refused to keep up their circulation because the premium on the bonds was too high. The President could not buy them without paying more than the banks would have to pay. If $31,000,000 more contraction was added to that caused by the bank contraction national bankruptcy was imminent.

Something had to be done. Now the complaint is that this money is left in the hands of the depositaries to the extent of $31,000,000. Is not that safer, in order to avert a crisis, than to lock it up? There is no dispute as to the fact that the national-bank circulation has been contracted $164,000,000 in four years and that $102,000,000 of greenbacks are now locked up, and if this $31,000,000 now in the hands of depositaries, and kept in circulation by being in their hands to be loaned out again, had been added to that great contraction, then there would, I submit, have been great danger of a panic all over the country, and especially all over the West, and that is no doubt what many gentlemen on the Republican side want and are seeking to bring about, so as to charge it to a Democratic administration, and are only sorry that the President has not pursued some policy that would destroy public confidence, so that they could go before the country and assert that Democrats can not carry on the Government successfully.

I repeat that the Republicans are responsible for all the evils arising from contraction of the currency and for the vast surplus now held by the Government. Why do I say so?

They passed the laws that made it impossible to obtain the bonds without paying enormous premiums. These laws prevent us from paying till 1907 nearly seven hundred and fifty million of our bonded debt. The national banks contracted their circulation—perhaps they were compelled to do so—because, if you please, of the high premium on bonds that they would have had to pay when they sought to buy them in lieu of the 3 percents that were called in, and we were obliged to call in all the 3 percents to get the surplus out. Still the fact remains that the President had nothing left under the laws which he found in existence, and which he has called on Congress to revise so as to reduce the amount that is pouring into the Treasury, except to pay off all the bonds he could.

Now he reports to Congress that he can get no more without paying any premium that the holders might demand; and he states what is obvious, that the moment it is ascertained that the policy of the Government requires the surplus to be paid for bonds not due, that very moment the bondholders have power to double the present premium, or refuse to allow the Government to get back a dollar of them, and he is denounced on this floor because he hesitates to squander the people's money on premiums to bondholders, even if he has the power to squander it under the law as it now stands.

The President does suggest a difficulty about the law in his message, and I am told he was advised by some of the very best lawyers in the country that there was doubt about his power under it. I have none; I believe he can buy bonds at any premium; but I do not think he ought to throw away the money of the people in that way.

The law reads:

That the Secretary of the Treasury may at any time apply the surplus money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as he may consider proper, to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds.

That was passed in an appropriation bill in 1881. The question has been presented to the mind of the President, as I learn, by leading lawyers, whether that did not mean that he could at any time pay the surplus moneys then in the Treasury for bonds. If it had meant, it was argued, any surplus that might come into the Treasury hereafter, appropriate words would have been used, and it would have said "any surplus now or hereafter in the Treasury of the United States may be paid out;" but the framers of the law took care not to say that; and if the President of the United States had ordered the Secretary to pay out 30 or 35 per cent. premium on bonds not due until 1907, there are gentlemen on the other side who would have argued, and argued plausibly, that that section only meant to give him the right to dispose of the surplus then locked up in the Treasury, and he would have been denounced for paying $1,500 to the bondholder for every $1,000 that we owed. At that time, of course, there were plenty of 3 per cent. bonds that were payable without premium, or they became payable very soon after the act of 1881 was passed.

Mr. PLUMB. While the Senator is on that point will he yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. PLUMB. At that date there were, as the Senator says, 3 per cent. bonds which were payable at the option of the Government. If that law was not prospective in its operation, it was entirely idle, because at that time there were no surplus funds which could not be used in the redemption of bonds without any legislation whatever. Therefore it must have meant that it was prospective, or it does not mean anything.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon. There was no authority prior to that in the President or in the Secretary of the Treasury to buy any bonds except for the sinking fund. That was provided for in 1862. The act of 1881 was the only authority that was given to buy bonds outside of the sinking fund; and that sinking fund, let me here repeat, is another fraud upon the people of the United States, and is another cunning device originating on the other side of the Chamber and at the other end of the Capitol by the Republican party to maintain high taxation, needless, and therefore vicious, beyond the wants of the Government.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator is certainly not so lacking in information as to make that charge. That provision was reported from the Finance Committee by the present Secretary of State, Mr. Bayard, as a separate bill.

Mr. BECK. Which provision?

Mr. PLUMB. The provision you are now commenting on in regard to the purchase of bonds.

Mr. BECK. I have said nothing against that. I am talking about the sinking fund, which is an annual addition to the amount we must raise by taxation. It has been swelled up by all sorts of devices and pretenses, fair and foul, to nearly $50,000,000 annually, when we have paid over $600,000,000 more on the debt than any Secretary of the Treasury ever ventured to say that sinking fund required us to pay. Still, under some pretense or other, we have to pay it annually and provide for it in adjusting taxation as though it was a debt, and we are maintaining that miserable fraud called a sinking fund to-day on the statute-book to pay bonds that are not payable until 1907. Will any Senator pretend to say that it was ever intended by any law creating a sinking fund that $50,000,000 a year should be collected from this people by taxation, in addition to the ordinary requirements of the Government, to buy bonds before they mature, when the date of maturity was fixed at 1907? That would be to admit that it is part of the policy of this country to pay off its bonds before they are due and to pay 200 per cent. premium on them, if the bondholder sees fit to ask it; yet we keep that law on the statute-books, collecting $50,000,000 a year, and we are forced to buy that amount of bonds at any premium, and then we have Republican Senators to-day denouncing the President of the United States because he does not go far beyond the requirements of the sinking fund, for he has this year bought all that the sinking fund requires, and pay the bondholders the premium they demand upon all that they will part with, and the Republicans will band together, refuse to reduce taxes, so that there will always be an enormous surplus to invest in such bonds and premiums as will enrich their bondholding friends at the expense of the tax-payer, and call that protecting American industry.

There ought to be something like decent consistency in the charges preferred. In one breath complaint is made of the President because he leaves the money in the banks to loan to the people, and then in another breath he is charged with locking it up in the Treasury and thereby producing contraction.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Kentucky states that the sinking fund has been provided for for this year nearly.

Mr. BECK. So the Secretary says in his report.

Mr. ALLISON. So he does. In providing for it he purchased fourteen or seventeen million—I do not remember the exact number—of bonds in the open market in New York. That is to say, a certain amount of bonds were purchased in New York for the purpose of making an application to the sinking fund. Is not that the fact?

Mr. BECK. I do not know where they were purchased; but the sinking fund was provided for, and the Secretary has felt obliged to provide for it, because the law required him to do so.

Mr. ALLISON. But it was provided for by the purchase of fourteen million of unmatured bonds, if that was the amount.

Mr. BECK. More than that, I think.

Mr. ALLISON. Well, seventeen millions. Now, I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky to construe this part of the law which says:

Provided, That the bonds so purchased and redeemed shall constitute no part of the sinking fund.

He seemed to think when he first read the law that the Secretary could buy for the sinking fund.

Mr. BECK. Oh, no; that proviso was one of the artful contrivances of the Republican gentlemen. They intended not only to keep taxation up to the point required to carry on the Government, but they required it to be kept up to yield $45,000,000 or $50,000,000 more as a sinking fund which should be coerced by taxation annually in addition to what was needed; but this provision says you shall not provide for that sinking fund by any purchase you may make; you must still keep up taxation to collect that, whether we want it or not, and these additional bonds that you buy out of any surplus after the sinking fund is provided for are not to be counted, so as to give the people any relief by reducing the sinking fund; that must be kept up to afford an excuse for 45 or 50 or 60 or 75 per cent. tariff protection in order to protect a few favored interests.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Kentucky misapprehends my question, I think. I want to know how it is that the President construed this law so as to prevent him from purchasing bonds in the open market, because it is not clear enough now, and yet four months ago he purchased seventeen millions of bonds and applied them to the sinking fund, although the law itself provided that he should not do it. I should like to have that explained.

Mr. BECK. The sinking fund is a fund that we are compelled to provide for by laws as old as 1862, and up to the point where it is required the Secretary had authority and is required to purchase bonds always and to keep them in the Treasury in a separate account. The bonds the Secretary bought lately were sinking-fund bonds, which he always had authority to obtain in any way he could. The law of 1881 went beyond that and said, "You must not interfere with this sinking-fund law; purchases under this act shall not be charged against it; taxation shall still be kept up to the old amount beyond what is necessary to provide for the wants of the Government; any bonds you purchase outside shall be canceled and not charged to the sinking fund."

What the President says is that, whether he has authority or not under this provision in the law of 1881 to apply any surplus that may come in hereafter, it is not a proper thing for him or any Secretary of the Treasury to do, to pay $130 or $150 for each $100 bond purchased, and that it is the duty of the representatives of the people to reduce the taxes wrongfully exacted down to a point where that surplus will not get into the Treasury, and not put that necessity upon him. I insist that any law which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to buy bonds whenever and at whatever rate he pleases, to bull or bear the market, to make or unmake fortunes, to gamble anywhere on the markets of this country, in Wall street or elsewhere, ought not to be tolerated and will not be tolerated by any Congress that represents the people fairly. That is in substance what the President says.

The surplus is on hand and increasing rapidly; the banks are contracting their circulation when it is needed badly. He has to a limited extent, in order to keep the money in use, left temporarily thirty-one million in the national depositories, which he says is a mere temporary expedient; but it is better than to lock it up. The fact is shown, and the Secretary of the Treasury repeats it, that there has been a contraction of $164,000,000 national-bank currency and $102,000,000 of greenbacks deposited, and if that $31,000,000 had been paid into the Treasury there might have been a panic all over the country, which would have been very lamentable to all but Republican politicians. The President has carefully sought to avoid these evils by the course he has pursued, and he has shown his anxiety for Congress to find some efficient remedy by sending the message he did to Congress.

All I care to add now is that the sinking fund, so called, ought to be abolished at once and the taxes reduced at least $100,000,000; that the money of the people ought to be, as I propose in a bill I have offered, issued in the form of coin certificates, redeemable at the option of the Government either in gold or silver coin, so as to bring the two coined metals together, as it is painfully apparent that the national banks are no longer to be relied upon to furnish a safe and reliable currency, which promise was the only reason or authority Congress had for chartering them; and I insist that the necessity of leaving this money in the hands of depositories, to be loaned to the people who own it, ought to be avoided by a prompt reduction of taxation. All these questions will be fully argued when the proper time comes, and I know the policy of the President and the Democratic party will be fully vindicated.

It will be very hard for gentlemen on the other side to explain why they have kept up taxes to the extent they have; why they have maintained this sinking fund against our protest fifty millions beyond any possible necessity; why they are still resisting all attempts to reduce taxation, and why they are finding fault because the President does not pay out the money for bonds at any premium the bondholders may ask, but calls on the representatives of the people to devise some way of stopping the surplus without paying excessive taxes. That is the complaint, and seems to be the principal offense with which he is charged.

Before I take my seat I wish, in answer to the question put by the Senator from Iowa, of how and by what authority the bonds bought were applied to the sinking fund, to read the statute:

SEC. 3694. The coin paid for duties on imported goods shall be set apart as a special fund, and shall be applied as follows:

First. To the payment in coin of the interest on the bonds and notes of the United States.

Second. To the purchase or payment of one per centum of the entire debt of the United States, to be made within each fiscal year, which is to be set apart as a sinking fund, and the interest of which shall in like manner be applied to the purchase or payment of the public debt, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time direct.

That was the original authority, which still remains, and required him to buy at least 1 per cent. of the debt, etc., no matter what the premium was.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I understand the Senator from Kentucky now to say that the Secretary of the Treasury has not exercised the authority given him by the act of 1881 at all.

Mr. BECK. I say that the President, in his message, announces that he has only purchased enough to supply the sinking fund, and expresses a doubt as to the other act, and asks Congress to remove it.

Mr. ALLISON. But my criticism was, and the Senator from Kentucky does not seem to answer it, that the Secretary of the Treasury, in his report, states that under this law of 1881 (which is not of doubtful construction, and the Senator from Kentucky now, for the first time, so far as I know, is able to find a doubt about it) he purchased $17,000,000 of bonds. Now, the question I asked was not whether there was any law for it, but, if he purchased them under this section of the statute of 1881, how he could do it when that law expressly provided that the bonds thus purchased should not be applied to the sinking fund; and yet he expressed doubt as to the law itself.

Mr. BECK. My respect for the chairman of the Appropriations Committee (and we serve together on the Finance Committee as well, and do not very often differ) induces me to say what I tried to say before. I read the section now to show that all the bonds the Secretary has lately purchased were purchased under section 3694 of the Revised Statutes, which required the Secretary to purchase the 1 per cent. of the debt, etc., and that he had not exercised, as far as I was aware, any authority in the purchase of bonds at a premium under the section of the act of 1881.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I understand the Senator.

Mr. BECK. That is what I was endeavoring to say all the time.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, if it be difficult for the Republican party, as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] supposes, to explain why the revenues were not reduced when there was a large public debt that was payable upon demand and therefore a legitimate use for all the surplus moneys, I should think it would be more difficult for the Democratic party, with the control of the Administration and of the House of Representatives, to explain why they have not been reduced during two years and more since the present Administration came into power.

But I rose for another purpose than to discuss that question. The President has deemed the reduction of the revenues so important as to justify his making it the sole burden of his message, instead of following the usual custom in that regard, and we have already had one set speech on the tariff by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], and to-day we appear to have plunged into the midst of a discussion of the subject.

I should like at the commencement of the discussion to know what the surplus is. I hold in my hand a table comparing, by bills, estimates of regular annual appropriations for the fiscal year 1888 with those for 1889, and also comparing the appropriations made by the general appropriation acts for 1888 (exclusive of deficiencies) with the estimates for 1889, and showing the aggregate of estimated regular annual and permanent appropriations, and amount of estimated revenues for 1889.

I find that the total estimates for the regular and permanent annual appropriations for 1889—these estimates being made by the advisers of the present Administration—amount to $384,094,527.58; that the amount of estimated revenues for 1889, exclusive of the estimated postal revenues, is $383,000,000. So that exclusive of the estimated postal revenues for 1889, the estimated appropriations exceed the estimated revenues by $1,094,527.58. Adding the estimated postal revenues, and the estimated revenues over the estimated regular and permanent appropriations for 1889 are $56,469,206.74.

In this estimate, while the Chief of Engineers has asked, for rivers and harbors, $40,041,998.77, there has been estimated by the Secretary of War only $12,213,470. The estimate of the amount required for the sinking fund for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, is $47,721,552.66. If, by appropriating less than the estimates, the increase of the estimates for the year 1889 over the appropriations of last year, when no appropriations were made for rivers and harbors and the deficiency bill failed, could be saved, the total amount of the surplus would be $90,823,563.98.

I hold in my hand a statement of the surplus revenue for twenty years, from which it appears that it has varied from 1868, when it was $28,297,798, to 1887, when the surplus was $103,471,097, and in which latter year, as I have said, there were no appropriations for rivers and harbors and the deficiency bill failed.

The statement is as follows:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1868 | $28,297,798 | 1878 | $20,799,551 |
| 1869 | 48,078,469 | 1879 | 6,879,500 |
| 1870 | 101,601,916 | 1880 | 65,833,653 |
| 1871 | 91,146,756 | 1881 | 100,069,404 |
| 1872 | 96,588,904 | 1882 | 145,543,810 |
| 1873 | 48,392,959 | 1883 | 132,879,444 |
| 1874 | 2,344,882 | 1884 | 104,363,025 |
| 1875 | 13,376,658 | 1885 | 63,463,771 |
| 1876 | 29,022,241 | 1886 | 93,956,588 |
| 1877 | 30,340,577 | 1887 | 103,471,097 |

In making any reduction of the revenues it is important to bear in mind also that the amount required for the sinking fund will gradually increase from $47,721,552.66 in 1888 to $94,502,729.36 in 1908, when, it is estimated, the last of the public debt will be paid.

I now submit a statement of the amounts required for the sinking fund in the future.

No. 46.—Statement giving an estimate of the amounts annually required for the sinking fund, according to present method of computing interest.

| 1905 | 355,414,041.71 | 83,205,822.67 |
| 1906 | 272,208,219.04 | 85,801,844.34 |

| Total | | 1,474,034,605.78 |

I repeat that if the appropriations are made which have been estimated for the ordinary expenses of the Government for the next fiscal year, and only $12,213,470 are appropriated for rivers and harbors, no provision made for deficiencies of the last year or the previous year, and the sinking fund provided for, the actual surplus will be only $56,469,206.74. Now, what is the condition of the Treasury? I hold in my hand a statement of the assets and liabilities of the Treasury of the United States, November 30, 1887, from which I find that the aggregate amount of assets was $623,457,535.90. I have no means of comparing this with the condition of the Treasury on the 30th of November, 1886, but I have a statement before me of the condition of the Treasury on September 30, 1886, and can compare the condition of the Treasury on the 30th of last month with its condition fourteen months previous, and I find that on the 30th of September, 1886, the Treasury assets were $517,388,900.20, which gives an increase of $106,068,634.89.

This increase mainly consists first of $6,471,176 gold held for the redemption of gold certificates. That is to say, the amount of outstanding gold certificates on the 30th of November, 1887, was that much greater than on the 30th of September, 1886. Also of $72,239,022 silver held for the redemption of silver certificates, that being the increase of the silver certificates for the same period. Also of $22,909,778 of the "fund held for the redemption of notes of national banks failed," "in liquidation," and "reducing circulation." So that the principal contraction of the currency during that period, shown by this statement, is the amount of $22,909,778, the additional amount on deposit for the redemption of national-bank notes on the 30th of November last over the amount on deposit fourteen months before that date.

I also find that the amount of the available balance in the Treasury on the 30th of last month was $55,258,701.19; assets not available, minor coin, and fractional silver coin, $24,208,274.11, or a total of $79,466,975.30. This is a decrease over the available balance fourteen months before. The available balance September 30, 1886, was $72,913,141.26; not available, minor coin, and fractional silver coin, $27,142,634.52, or a total of $100,055,775.78.

In considering any proposition to reduce the revenue it ought to be borne in mind also that important subjects of national concern are being pressed upon the attention of Congress, the proper disposition of which will create new and large demands upon the Treasury. There are other important objects, national in their character, and of great urgency, for which largely increased appropriations are demanded by every principle which should control the action of Congress. Among these is the improvement of rivers and harbors. Congress, under the commerce clause of the Constitution, has power to regulate interstate commerce. It has assumed jurisdiction over the navigable waterways of the country to remove obstructions, to authorize bridges, and to determine what works shall be made for the improvement of navigation. It is the settled doctrine now that Congress may provide for the improvement of harbors in the interests of foreign commerce, and for the improvement of our rivers, including rivers wholly within the boundaries of a State, the commerce of which helps to swell the great volume of interstate and foreign commerce, by appropriations from the Federal Treasury.

In my judgment this power of Congress is coupled with a duty to the States and to the people of the States to exercise it. When the earlier appropriations were made for river and harbor improvements there was a diversity of opinion as to the power of Congress on this subject, and many eminent statesmen denied the power of Congress to appropriate money for the improvement of rivers. Other statesmen, equally eminent, maintained with great vigor and ability that Congress could rightfully exercise such power.

The amounts which were appropriated in the early years of our history, when our commerce was small and confined to the Atlantic coast, and when the condition of our Treasury would not justify large appropriations, ought to be no criterion by which to determine what appropriations shall be made to-day, when civilization has spread across the continent and when our system of interstate commerce by rail and by water extends over our entire territory from the Great Lakes to the Gulf and from ocean to ocean. The amount which has heretofore been appropriated by Congress for the improvement of rivers and harbors is insignificant compared with the magnitude and importance of the work. I had occasion to examine the matter during the recess of Congress and I found that the total amount heretofore appropriated for such purposes is about $160,000,000. Prior to 1867 there were only four years in which the appropriations amounted to $1,000,000, and out of sixty-one bills appropriating money for that purpose there were but nineteen in which the aggregate of the appropriations exceeds a million dollars.

The amount appropriated by Congress is small compared with the amount which is appropriated by the principal foreign nations for the purpose of improving their rivers and harbors. France has 1 mile of railroad for every 11 square miles of territory. We have 1 mile of railroad for every 29 square miles of territory; and yet, while we have appropriated altogether only $160,000,000 for the improvement of our great waterways, France, having before appropriated more than that amount, recently, in a single budget, as I am told, made provision for expending $175,800,000 for canals and the improvement of rivers and harbors.

Germany has 1 mile of railroad for every 9 square miles of territory; and yet, pursuing the same enlightened and liberal policy in regard to rivers and harbors as France, she appropriates annually more for the improvement of rivers and harbors than has ever been advocated by the most enthusiastic advocate of river and harbor improvements in this country.

The estimate of the amounts which could be economically expended in the improvement of rivers and harbors for the year ending June 30, 1887, by the local engineers was over $45,000,000; these estimates were reviewed and cut down by the Chief of Engineers to about $30,000,000; and yet Congress undertook to appropriate last year less than $10,000,000 by a bill which did not receive the Executive sanction. Was there any good reason why the full amount recommended by the Chief of Engineers should not have been appropriated? I assert not only that there was no good reason, but that upon every principle except one, and that one that Congress ought not to appropriate money at all for rivers and harbors, the action of Congress was wasteful and wrong.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will pause. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, being the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to consent to let that bill stand aside informally for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside, retaining its place. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAIR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The resolution remains before the Senate.

Mr. DOLPH. I was about to say that the cost of river and harbor improvements, the cost of supervision, and the cost of plant, is greatly increased by small appropriations, and that there is always a great loss from deterioration of the work while it is suspended for want of money. I was told recently by a gentleman that a member of the Mississippi River Commission had stated to him that the damage to the plant and to the work on the Mississippi River by reason of the stoppage of the work for want of funds would be equal to the amount which would have been received for that improvement had the bill that was passed at the last Congress been signed by the President.

I am not informed what the amount of the estimates made by the local engineers for rivers and harbors for the next year is. But, as I have said, the Chief of Engineers has estimated $40,041,998.77. Is there any reason why that amount should not be appropriated? If we can not rely upon the engineers who have charge of these works as to the amount which can be expended and the amount which should be appropriated, upon whom can we rely? I undertake to say that every member of this Senate knows that at least the amount estimated as required for the works in progress by the Chief of Engineers should, as a matter of economy, be appropriated for that purpose next year, and that $40,000,000 appropriated in one bill would go as far in carrying on the works as $80,000,000 would appropriated in annual installments of $10,000,000.

Then, again, large appropriations render it possible to make contracts for the work, and it goes without saying, I think, that public works or private enterprises can be much more cheaply carried on by contract than by day's work.

Now, while there is money in the Treasury applicable to the purpose, and while we have time for proper and deliberate consideration of the plans and the manner of executing the work, provision should be made for the defense of our seacoast. The question of seacoast defense is rapidly becoming an absorbing one in the United States. The danger is too great and too imminent for Congress to delay longer in making some provision for the commencement of the work.

The story of our coast defense, which has so often recently been brought to the attention of Congress, may be told in a few words. Such improvements and inventions have been made within the last quarter of a century in the means of offensive and defensive warfare, that our guns, our forts, and our ships, which twenty-five years ago compared favorably with those of other nations, have become worthless for defense. Since the close of the war we have devoted our energies to the development of our means of internal transportation and to paying our war debt, and have made no progress in the matter of coast defenses, while other nations have been experimenting with guns, projectiles, explosives, and armor, and have provided themselves with fortifications of modern type and modern navies. The result is that our seacoast from the St. Croix to the Rio Grande, and from Mexico to British Columbia, with our important seacoast cities and our great and growing and important coastwise commerce, is entirely defenseless.

Is this condition of things to be allowed to continue? I hear no one proposing such a course. On the contrary, from the Legislatures of the States and Territories, from political conventions and other conventions of the people, from boards of trade and representative bodies everywhere throughout the length and breadth of our land, and from the public press, comes up a demand to Congress now, while the money is in the Treasury, and before we cut off the sources of revenue, to provide for the fortification of our seacoast.

The Senate at the last session passed two bills, one of them authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to contract for steel for modern built-up steel rifles for the Navy; another authorizing the Secretary of War to make a similar contract for steel for guns for the Army, and appropriating money to commence fortifications; but they received no consideration in the other House. Can it be that the most popular branch of the National Legislature is opposed to fortifying our coast, or are they afraid to intrust the Administration with the expenditure of the money necessary for that purpose?

The board on fortifications and other defenses have recommended an appropriation for the first year of $21,500,000 for this purpose. Can any one give a good reason why this sum should not be appropriated and the commencement of this work provided for before we cut off our revenues and leave ourselves without the funds required for coast defenses?

While the leading nations of Europe have been, by subsidies and by liberal compensation to their steam-ship lines for carrying their foreign mails, building up their foreign commerce, establishing speedy and certain communication with every country which promised a profitable trade, our Government has done nothing, and our ship-owners have been unable to compete with the cheaper iron and cheaper labor of Great Britain in ship-building and with the subsidized steam-ship lines of other countries, and, as a consequence, we have lost our share in the foreign carrying trade. I think every one will admit that something should be done to restore our merchant marine.

We have a surplus of manufactured products which other nation need. We have facilities for indefinitely increasing it. New foreign markets mean increased manufactures, more work and better wages for our working men. The essential means for securing additional foreign markets is the same as that which has been adopted by other countries—speedy, certain, and regular communication by means of transportation lines owned and manned and controlled by citizens of the United States interested in extending our commerce and carrying the American flag to every country with which we would establish and foster a foreign trade. Two and a half millions of our surplus revenues could be profitably expended for the purpose of placing our citizens upon an equality with the citizens of Great Britain, France, Germany, Belgium, and Italy, whose capital is invested in the foreign carrying trade, and there ought to be annual appropriations for the purpose of aiding steam-ship lines between the United States and the countries of South and Central America, and China, and Japan, until such steam-ship lines establish a business by which they will be able to compete with the subsidized lines of other countries.

There are other directions in which a portion of the surplus revenues could be economically expended. The Government is annually paying in this city and in many other places throughout the United States large sums for the rent of buildings for the accommodation of the public business. From the fact that the national bonds are exempt from taxation, and for other reasons are a favorite form of investment, the Government can borrow money cheaper than any citizen, and it ought to be able to erect and maintain public buildings cheaper than its citizens. There are places where the Government has no building now for the accommodation of its business, and other places where the accommodations are inadequate, in which public buildings might be economically erected, and the expenditure of the money would be of great benefit to the people.

Congress at the last session passed a bill which has been already referred to during this discussion, known as the dependent-pension bill, a measure for the relief of the veterans of the Union Army, the men who by their valor and their sacrifices, when the fate of the nation hung upon the arbitrament of battle, saved the Union—a measure dictated alike by justice to them and by the patriotic sentiment of the country. It is to be hoped that before Congress adjourns that bill will become a law, and from five to seven millions of the surplus in the Treasury provided for.

The Senate has twice, at least, passed another bill, known as the Blair educational bill, a measure dictated alike by motives of self-preservation and wise statesmanship, the merits of which I will not stop to discuss, but it has failed to receive consideration in the House of Representatives. If that bill should become a law provision will have been made for $7,000,000 of the surplus for the first year and an increased amount thereafter.

There has been for the last two years virtually no appropriation made for the survey of the public lands. There ought to be for some years to come from half a million to a million dollars appropriated to extnde the public surveys. The Government invites its citizens to go upon the public lands and become settlers under the pre-emption and homestead laws, and it is bound in good faith, within a reasonable time, to survey their claims, to establish their boundaries, and to enable them to secure titles to their lands. Instead of there being obstacles placed in the way of the settler in obtaining his title, every facility should be afforded him.

The Government is the great land-owner. It owns vast tracts of land which are worthless without irrigation. Some portion of the surplus ought to be expended in experiments to ascertain if water can not be obtained for the irrigation of these desert lands, and, where water can be had in sufficient quantity, stored in reservoirs and utilized by canals, the Government might, with economy and profit, aid in the reclamation of desert lands.

A proper estimate of the value of our Pacific possessions, of the possibilities of our trans-Pacific commerce, and of the international importance of the project on the part of legislative and executive departments of this Government would ere this have secured the commencement of the Nicaragua canal, and that would have created a demand for fifteen or twenty millions more of the surplus for some years to come.

In short, sir, if we were to take our eyes off the increasing surplus in the Treasury and stop bemoaning the prosperity of the country, and trying to make the people dissatisfied with an alleged burden of taxation which they do not feel, and to devote our energies to the development of the great resources which the Almighty has placed in our hands, to increasing the products of our manufactures, of our shops, of our farms, of our mines, and our forests, to cheapening transportation by the improving of our rivers and harbors, and to restoring our foreign commerce, we would act wiser than we do.

As I attempted to show at the outset, the surplus in the Treasury is not nearly as large as is frequently claimed, and against the surplus which would remain in the Treasury after providing for the sinking fund if the appropriations estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury were made, I would offset the difference between the amount recommended by the Chief of Engineers for rivers and harbors and the amount estimated by the Secretary of War, $27,828,528.77. I would appropriate for fortifications the amount recommended by the board on fortifications and other defenses, $21,500,000; for the restoration of our foreign carrying trade, the building up of our merchant marine, not less than $2,500,000; for surveys of the public lands $500,000; for public buildings for some years to come not less than $10,000,000; annually for dependent pensions $7,000,000; the Blair educational bill $7,000,000, making a total of $76,328,528.77, leaving a deficit of nearly $20,000,000, and that without making any provision for the deficiency of last year or the year before.

Mr. President, I have suggested several objects to which the surplus in the Treasury might be properly devoted. I do not expect that Congress will do anything half so meritorious as appropriating the amount recommended by the Chief of Engineers for rivers and harbors, or the amount recommended by the board on fortifications and other defenses for the fortification of our seacoasts; and I fear that the dependent-pension bill, and the Blair educational bill, at the close of the present Congress, will be no nearer becoming laws than they were when the last Congress adjourned, and I do not expect that Congress will make the appropriation that I advocate for the restoration of our merchant marine. If we can not spend the surplus revenues for these great and necessary objects of national importance, of course the accumulation of the surplus must be stopped; but what sources of revenue shall be cut off or diminished is a question upon which we are not agreed, and which I will not discuss to-day.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the Senator who has just taken his seat in the close of his remarks expressed great solicitude that the American flag should be again seen upon the ocean, and announced that he was for building up the American merchant marine. There is a bill pending in this Congress now, offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] on behalf of the Red Star Line of Philadelphia, a corporation a large majority of whose stock is in the hands of American citizens who propose in this bill to purchase the last dollar of outstanding stock before this legislation shall be had from Congress, who ask the poor privilege of putting sixteen of their steamers, built with their money, under the American flag in order to carry it to foreign ports. I undertake to say that not one single Senator on the other side of the Chamber will record his vote in favor of that bill. It was reported from the Committee on Commerce at the last Congress.

We have removed a great many of the disadvantages under which the carrying trade of the United States labored. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] and myself labored together in that behalf, and we have finally brought the law to the condition that an American citizen can sail his vessel under the American flag as cheaply as under that of any foreign nation. Under the navigation laws, under the statutes as they stood before this amendment, no American citizen could bring a foreign-bought vessel under the American flag for any purpose whatever, and under the statutes before this amendment the difference in expense and cost of sailing a vessel under the American flag was so much against American citizens that they were driven to put their vessels under the flags of England and Germany and other nations. After we made this amendment the manager of the Red Star Line came with this bill, claiming that that line could not afford to build vessels in the United States on account of the difference in the cost between building on the Delaware and on the Clyde, but the law had been amended so that he could now sail these ships as cheaply as under the British flag, but he asked the poor privilege of putting the American flag over these sixteen steamers owned by that company.

The Senator from Oregon will not vote for the bill, with all his solicitude for the American merchant marine. He will say by his vote deliberately to these American citizens, "You shall not put your property under the flag of your own country; you may put the American flag over these ships in a foreign port, and you may sail them between foreign ports, but you can not touch American soil with the emblem of your own nationality upon your own property." Why is this? It is because our friends on the opposite side of this Chamber do not propose to touch these infamous navigation laws for fear they may break the solemn compact they have made with the protected industries of this country by tariff taxation. They do not propose to give any American citizen this privilege for fear that a crevasse may be created in the long line of protected industries under the tariff which will result in a deluge.

Mr. President, we have heard a great deal about the river and harbor bill. I stand here to-day to say that a more unjust, a more unreasonable charge was never made against any Chief Executive than that which has been repeated often in the press and from the hustings of this country against President Cleveland because he vetoed the last river and harbor bill, and the charge is made by Senators who do not know, or who do not care to know, what the facts were in regard to that legislation. The bill came to the Senate from the House of Representatives appropriating $11,000,000 for rivers and harbors. It came before the Committee on Commerce, of which I am a member. I called attention then to the fact that the reports of the Bureau of Engineers, then lying on our table, showed that at that very time $10,000,000 was in the hands of the bureau, not one dollar ofwhich had been expended, from the preceding year's appropriations, and when we passed the bill, not for $11,000,000 but $14,000,000——

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me to ask him why the money was not expended?

Mr. VEST. Yes, I will tell the Senator what has been the result in regard to certain appropriations, speaking from my service of ten years upon the Committee on Commerce. It resulted from the fact that the Bureau of Engineers for one reason or another declared that they were not able to expend the appropriations during the current year, either from neglect or for some other reason, I do not pretend to say what. It has been the practice of the Bureau of Engineers to come in and make estimates, as the Senator from Oregon has just stated, of thirty or forty or fifty million dollars for public works, and they have made them because they said that they knew Congress would cut down the appropriation to one-third or one-fourth the amount they asked for, and then, when we have made these appropriations at their suggestion, instead of carrying on the works, they, as in the instance I have just mentioned, allowed the public money appropriated to rivers and harbors to lie idle and then come to Congress and ask for $30,000,000 more.

Mr. PLUMB. Has not the President of the United States control of this matter? Does he not control the Army?

Mr. VEST. The President of the United States has no more control of the matter, practically, than if he did not occupy that position at all. How can he supervise the expenditures on our rivers and harbors and see where the money is expended? Is he to perform the detail duties of this entire Government? Is there to be no intermediate? Are there no instrumentalities to be used? The Bureau of Engineers under the practice and under the law has this money in its control, and it refuses or fails to expend it, and then comes to Congress and asks for another appropriation of twenty or thirty million dollars, and when we have passed a bill appropriating it what does the President do? Just like any other practical and honest and sensible business man would do, he says, "I will not sign this bill when it is evident you have $10,000,000 on hand, which you have not been able to expend, out of the last year's appropriations."

I am very much astonished to hear these charges from my friend from Kansas. If any argument were needed for a Christmas recess his speech would furnish it. He needs new Christian influences from the great anniversary of Christendom which celebrates the natal day of Him who said, "Do unto others as you would that others should do unto you," and "Peace, good will toward men."

The Senator deprecates the fact that the President did not sign that bill and put in circulation some $14,000,000 among the people, yet I well remember when we reported that bill from the Committee on Commerce the most bitter attacks upon it, the most excruciating ridicule, the most terrible sarcasm came from my honorable friend from Kansas. He took it up by sections and in the aggregate; he ridiculed it; he denounced it; he voted against it. Why did not my honorable friend, by his vote, help to put $14,000,000 in circulation amongst the poor people of the country? He opposed our bill, and it would seem by the most ordinary rules of consistency that he should approbate what the President has done in regard to it.

Now, sir, my friend from Kansas has seen proper to allude to me in connection with the national banking system. I had no idea that he would discuss the national banks, or the appropriations that were expected to be made by this Congress, upon a resolution to adjourn for the Christmas holidays. Let me say to that honorable Senator that I have never denounced the national banking system in its service as a legitimate banking scheme. I have never said one word against national banks as banks of deposit or exchange. I have denounced, and I will denounce as long as I remain in public life, that feature of the national banking law which gives to them the power to expand or contract the currency of this country at their own will.

I would not give to any corporation, to any individual or any association of individuals that could be selected on the face of this earth the enormous power which is given to the national banks of this country by existing legislation. That I have denounced; that is the feature of the national banking law which I have opposed—the right of these institutions to curtail their bonds or buy more and expand or contract the currency of the country for their own purposes. I would not give that power to any human association, much less to a set of men whose business it is to make money, and who finally, no matter what may have been their original intent, find all their aims and purposes confined to their own interests.

The Senator from Kansas says that the President of the United States has lent himself to the purposes of speculators in Wall street; that he has gone into the market and purchased bonds in order to meet the purposes of men who were speculating in the business of the country.

Mr. President, I recollect in 1881, when the representatives of the people undertook to fund the maturing indebtedness of this country at a lower rate of interest, 3 per cent., the week's discussion that we had here. Then, indeed, the corridors were crowded with speculators, bank presidents, bank cashiers, bank stockholders, threatening, cajoling, and using every sort of instrumentality in order to defeat the proposed legislation. We thought that the national banks were the fiscal agencies of the Government; we thought we had a right to use them for the purpose of reducing the rate of interest on the public indebtedness and bringing it down to 3 per cent. After they had exhausted every other means and every other argument, they said to us, "Pass this bill and we will precipitate a panic in Wall street; we will strike down the securities of the country; we will show you that the Congress of the United States has not all the power in this country; that there is something else to be considered. If you pass this bill we will strike a blow at the financial condition of this country that will reverberate from ocean to ocean." We passed the law, and received a veto message from Mr. Hayes, in which he said that the national banking system must be protected; that 3 per cent. was too low a rate of interest; and yet the same bonds were afterwards funded at 2½ per cent. The national banks of the United States, instead of assuming this burden in common with their fellow-citizens, after the bill was passed, in forty-eight hours struck down the money market in New York, precipitated bonds, more than $25,000,000 in a single hour, ruining thousands of men on account of that action. I heard no dissertation then about the President, I heard nothing said then about a combination between the Chief Executive and the speculators. On the other hand, our friends on the other side of this Chamber supported that veto and the bill failed to become a law.

Mr. PLUMB. The bill never came here after the veto. It failed in the House of Representatives.

Mr. VEST. Very well; it failed, and failed by the votes of the Republican party.

Another word, in regard to the Indian land question, and I am done. I feel on that subject somewhat like the Senator from Kansas, but I do not understand the facts as he does. He says that now there is no disorder in regard to land in the Indian Territory. I read but this morning that already lawless men were gathering on the border of that Territory to invade Oklahoma, and the Senator knows and I know that the real reason why the President of the United States did not appoint those commissioners was on account of the unsettled and lawless condition of that country at the time, and the additional fact that the Indians, in advance of any approach on the part of the United States to purchase whatever interest they had in those lands, declared that they would not consider such a proposition at all. Without waiting to be approached, without waiting for any advance, they declared to this Government that they did not propose to give up such right as they had, whether it was vested or inchoate; that they intended to stand where they have stood for the last thirty years, upon their treaty stipulations, without dealing with the Government on this question in any way whatever.

I shall not allude to what has been said in regard to the purchase of bonds in open market by this Administration. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has already explained it.

I want to say now, without detaining the Senate further, that the message of the President of the United States has defined, and sharply defined, the issues between the two great parties. For one I indorse that message from beginning to end. I am prepared to go into the canvass upon it, and whatever the result may be, I say now publicly, as I shall say everywhere, if the President of the United States has done nothing else he has proven himself to be an honest, brave, patriotic Executive, and one worthy the leadership of any party that has ever existed in the history of this country.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] have, I think, avoided as far as possible the issue that has been presented.

So far as the Senator from Missouri is concerned and the action on the bill of which I spoke, we happened to be together. It was not the Senator from Missouri or the Senator from Kentucky, but the Administration that I spoke of, and I spoke of the actions of the Administration as in contrast with that which those Senators in common with their colaborers on that side of the Chamber have been advocating; and it has always been a matter of wonder to me that such public-spirited gentlemen have not found it consistent with their public duty to criticise the action on the part of their own Administration which they so freely criticised and denounced on the part of Republican administrations.

Mr. President, the charge as to the vicious character of fiscal legislation enacted while the Republican party was in power comes with poor grace from the Democratic party. They have had the House of Representatives ever since 1874, except for one single term of two years; they had the Senate for two years, 1879-'81, and during that period of time had the whole legislative power of the Government. You may search the records of Congress in vain for any serious proposition made from any Democratic quarter to amend, alter, repeal, or seriously modify a single one of all these acts which they so freely denounce. The Democratic party sat in silence self-convicted upon this issue during all these years of their legislative power, during which time they made no effort whatever looking to the repeal of any of the legislation which had been enacted in the days of Republican power. Mr. Cleveland's administration has not even recommended any changes in the sinking-fund or other fiscal acts, which would make them less obnoxious to the charges made by the Senator from Kentucky. Republican legislation may, therefore, appeal to the Democratic party for vindication.

I differed with the President (Mr. Hayes) who vetoed the bond bill of 1881. I voted for the bill and would have voted cheerfully to have carried it over the Presidential veto. Whatever of subserviency that veto may have manifested to the national banking interest of this country, it remained for a Democratic President to make the president of a national bank his Secretary of the Treasury. It remained for the Treasurer of the United States under a Democratic administration, himself a cashier of a national bank, to so juggle the returns of the Treasury Department as to subtract nearly $30,000,000 of current assets from the list of available funds, and thereby make an excuse for not paying the national debt to that extent. It was that same president of a national bank, as Secretary of the Treasury, who recommended that the greenbacks be retired, and that to the national banks which my friend from Missouri characterizes so now be committed the privilege of supplying the country with currency.

No Republican administration ever made the president of a national bank Secretary of the Treasury, and no Republican administration ever made the cashier of a national bank Treasurer of the United States. No Republican administration ever depreciated silver coin by publishing it in official Treasury statements as unavailable for the payment of the public debt with, as this Administration has done, and does every time it makes a debt statement; and no Republican administration had such distrust of the solvency of the Treasury that it went into the money market and bought ten millions of gold in order to strengthen the reserve. That is what this Democratic Administration did in the early days of its incumbency, notwithstanding the large and dangerous Treasury surplus.

Mr. President, in casting doubt upon the validity of the legislation requiring the purchase of bonds out of surplus funds, and which he did not wish to execute, the President is attacking his own official family. That legislation was reported from the Finance Committee of the Senate by the gentleman who is now his Secretary of State as a separate bill. Because it could not go through as a separate bill, it went, by unanimous consent, into an appropriation bill in the precise terms in which that Senator, now Secretary of State, reported it. The President could have had ample advice as to the true intent and meaning, and the continuing authority of that legislation which Senator Bayard had reported to the Senate, and secured the passage of, by inquiring of this member of his official family.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will it materially interfere with the Senator if I ask him a question in this connection?

Mr. PLUMB. Not at all.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I do not intend to engage in the discussion at this time, but I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas to tell the Senate in a plain, straightforward manner what has been the custom of legislation, both in the House of Representatives and the Senate, touching riders on appropriation bills. Have they not been more particularly construed by reference to the peculiar circumstances that existed at that particular time and to which the legislation was supposed to apply?

Let me illustrate it in this case. In the year 1881 there was outstanding in the neighborhood of four hundred and fifty million of 3 per cent. bonds, upon which there was no premium in the market. The case as it stands to-day reveals the fact that we have seven hundred and fifty million of bonds, upon which there is a large premium in the market. In 1883 we reduced, as we supposed, the tariff. The Tariff Commission investigated in 1882. In 1883 the tariff, as we supposed, was very materially reduced, thereby continuing the 3 per cent. bonds for a longer period of time. The surplus, which it was proposed to reduce by a rapid payment of the bonds, was to continue somewhat, because the process was expected to be delayed. Here was a rider put on an appropriation bill in 1881, which was to cover any surplus in the Treasury that might exist at that time, which was intended to apply, and which could only apply, to the bonds that were then within the power of the Government to call. Now, I submit the injustice of the criticism the Senator makes on the President of the United States when he says it is the duty of the Executive to pay this high premium on bonds with the surplus in the Treasury, the President avowing that he does not think there is a full exercise of his discretion in the law which was attached as a rider to an appropriation bill; but under the act of 1862, which is a positive act and a positive exercise of power in the President, he does apply seventeen millions to the sinking fund.

Now, the Senator from Kansas will bear with me a moment more. He was a member of the Senate, as I think, at that time, and a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and when he voted for that rider in the appropriation bill—for we are in the habit of calling such legislation riders to appropriation bills—he certainly did not intend to confer upon the President of the United States, the then President or any succeeding President, the power to pay 25 per cent. premium on bonds, the most extraordinary power that has ever been conferred upon a Secretary of the Treasury since the organization of this Government. If it were conferred to-day by legislation it would be that very same legislation that appears in the appropriation act of 1881, and there is not a gentleman upon that side of the Chamber who will to-day confer upon the present Secretary of the Treasury or any Secretary of the Treasury the power to go into the market to bull or bear, as the case may be, the bonds of the United States. Not one of you would vote for such a bill to-day; and to undertake to say that that is a continuing power or was intended to be a continuing power after the redemption of the 3 per cent. bonds is perfectly absurd. The President of the United States has not exercised any such power. The Secretary of the Treasury avows that he does not think it a power that ought to be conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury or any officer of the Government; and he has not exercised it.

Now, one word more, if the Senator will bear with me. He finds fault with the Secretary of the Treasury for leaving the money in the hands of the Government depositaries. Well, that may be a special power, but at the same time that power exists, and the Treasury is amply secured by a pledge of United States bonds, not at the premium at which it is proposed the President shall buy the bonds for the purpose of getting the money into circulation, but on bonds at par the loan is made.

The Senator has made——

Mr. PLUMB. I yielded to the Senator for a question. I had just got fairly started in what I had to say.

Mr. MCPHERSON. There is one other point I wish to speak about and then shall yield the floor.

Mr. PLUMB. I can not yield further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). The Senator from Kansas has the floor. Does he decline to yield further?

Mr. PLUMB. I decline to yield further. I yielded for a question. The Senator will have ample time after I conclude to make a speech.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator answer my question? Will he vote for such a bill?

Mr. PLUMB. I voted for the provision under consideration, as the Senator from New Jersey did, and as the members of the President's Cabinet did. I do not know of any difference in regard to the duty of obeying a provision of law found in an appropriation bill and one that is found in some other bill. The provisions under which silver certificates are issued were enacted in appropriation bills. I never heard that the President thought there was any question as to his duty to carry out these provisions of law or that they were temporary in character. Important provisions in relation to our dealings with Indian tribes are found in appropriation bills. The Army of the United States was reorganized at the close of the war by means of legislative provisions inserted in an appropriation bill. The organization and military code thus created exist to-day.

It is a new thing to me to have anybody say that a law is lacking in force because it happens to be found on some particular page of the statute book, or in some particular conjunction. The President has already obeyed this law to the extent of purchasing the amount of $17,000,000 of bonds under it. If good for $17,000,000 it is good for the whole $140,000,000. It was framed to meet such a contingency as has arisen. The Senator from New Jersey, with all his wisdom, did not anticipate so early a payment of the 3 per cent. bonds; but they have been paid and the next resource is the purchase of bonds which the act provides for.

It is the duty of the President to obey it, and however much declamation there may be about the unwisdom of paying 24 per cent. or any other per cent. premium for bonds, there can not be any doubt about its being a wiser exercise of power than it is to give the use of the money to the banks who pay nothing to the Government. In the one case the Government saves 2½ per cent. on every dollar that it invests in its own bonds; in the other case it gives the whole of it to the banks and authorizes them to put the screws so much the tighter on those who are obliged to borrow from them. If the money can not be made use of by the Government in any other way, give it back to the people directly, rather than send it without interest to the banks.

Now, Mr. President, the fundamental proposition is this: that the Treasury is collecting a sum of money, about ten millions a month, beyond its needs, that the people require that this money be paid back to it every week, or every month, as fast as it comes in; that by reason of the non-payment of this money back into the channels of trade, business has come to a standstill in certain portions of the country, and everywhere there is sluggish business, high interest, grave apprehension, by reason of the enormous contraction of the currency brought about by the Treasury policy. I am dealing with the present, and not the prospective condition of the Treasury surplus. Cutting off further accumulation will not dispose of the money on hand. This is the pressing affair.

The President, for the purpose of making a point against the tariff, apparently, says, "I will not carry out this law, and thereby dispose of the existing surplus, but I will run the country to the brink of destruction in order to compel Congress to take up and do with the tariff exactly what I would have them do." He confronts the country with this great peril; he has stopped business in all portions of the country; he has enhanced the price of money to the borrower, the business man; he throws more and more the business of the entire country into the hands of speculators, simply in order that he may compel Congress, under the pressure of this threat of ruin, to act on the tariff from his standpoint. That is the issue.

The Democratic party, here and elsewhere, have taken up the President's cry, "The country is in peril. Nothing but prompt and thorough action by means of legislation to reduce the surplus will avail." It is under these conditions that Congress has met; and the first thing, instead of a bill to reduce the revenue, is a resolution to take a two-weeks recess. Meanwhile the surplus will continue to pile up and the peril increase. Is this what the country had a right to expect, a proper response to the President's message? Is the Democratic party incompetent to deal with this question? I must, in candor, however, admit that something has been done to reduce the surplus, and something proposed to reduce it still further. This Administration increased the expenses of government this year over $25,000,000 beyond those of last year. That much has been taken out of the surplus; and I have in my hand a joint resolution which has passed the House of Representatives at the present session, and which is to be all the legislation we are to have of a financial character until after the holidays, an entire month. Meanwhile the peril, the responsibility for which the President has put upon Congress, is to continue. The response of the House to the lurid statements of the President is found in this joint resolution to pay a month's extra wages to a lot of House employés who, in the effort of the Democratic majority to make pegs and holes correspond, are to be turned out of office shortly.

The Democrats found out pretty early that they had not offices enough to go around, and they have adopted a device of taking in one set and turning them out with a month's pay, and then taking in another set, and so on. Here is this resolution passed by the House of Representatives the 19th day of the present month:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all officers and employés of the House who were employed on the 5th day of December, 1887, and who have ceased or who shall, prior to the 1st day of January, 1888, cease to be so employed—shall be paid a sum equal to one month's pay at the rate they were severally receiving on the 5th day of December, 1887; and an amount sufficient for this purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the same to be immediately available.

A polite phrase designed to cover the political exigency—

That is the response of the House of Representatives to the President's message—no committees, no legislation, nothing but chaos, and a resolution to pay Democratic political debts out of the Treasury. The whole Democratic party will go in procession on and off the House force to get this one month's pay. This year there are one hundred and forty-odd of them turned out and voted a month's pay, and next year one hundred and forty new ones will come and the old ones move out, get a month's pay, and so on.

Thus, in due time, the entire party—that is to say, if something does not happen to them next year—will actually get their hands into the public Treasury. They have been hankering after it, lo, these many years. They had a hunger which could not be satisfied with the offices and emoluments which sufficed for the Republicans. So they have created some hundreds of new places, increased the salaries attached to the old places, and, their resources being exhausted, they have adopted the month's pay device to take care of the remainder of the hungry horde, thereby reducing the surplus, but carefully putting the reduction into the party pocket.

That is the response of the House of Representatives to the message of the President. Abandoning all consideration of our foreign affairs, taking no account of any other thing in the wide horizon supposed to be swept by the Executive vision, he simply dwells on the surplus in the Treasury and the necessity of reducing it, and the House of Representatives comes back with a proposition to give every member of the Democratic party a month's pay. That would reduce the surplus, and that, I think, is just about as serious, probably, as the action of the House will be when they get further on. At all events, this is what the Democratic House, the one immaculate body that never errs, which represents the high tide of Democratic sentiment this country through, has to say about this very important question, the sole topic of the President's communication to Congress.

I do not care about the partisan aspect of this controversy. I do care that the business of this country shall not be interrupted in order to make capital for or against any plan of revising the tariff or reducing the surplus. I do care that the volume of currency, already too small, shall not be diminished by 10 per cent., and that the President of the United States, in order to diminish it, shall not deliberately violate the law that he has sworn to maintain and to execute. And I think the Senator can afford to set a good example of devotion to public interests by refusing to adjourn and by insisting on going ahead with the important business of the session.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, if the President of the United States is to be the guide, Congress meets every two years under the impending shadow of a great disaster. One thing terrifically dangerous is about to happen, and the whole business of the country is to be upset and destroyed if some pet scheme of this Administration is not immediately adopted by the National Congress. Two years ago we came together with fright depicted on the countenances of a great many public men and absolute terror in the executive department of the Government with reference to the question whether we should continue to coin $2,000,000 of silver a month or whether we should stop that coinage. Nay, the Administration did not wait till it got into power; the President from Buffalo, contrary to the usual custom of Executives, issued a proclamation to the people, and more particularly to the House of Representatives, calling upon them to immediately legislate to avoid this great and impending disaster, to put the question beyond all doubt. I supposed then, and I suppose now, that it was with the view that this Administration might not be annoyed by one of the difficult economic and financial questions of the day.

When we received the message of the President at the last session it dealt largely with that subject. When we got the report of the Secretary of the Treasury it was full of the subject and practically contained nothing else. When we got the report of the Treasurer it abounded in denunciations of the financial policy adopted by Congress in relation to the use of silver. The Comptroller of the Currency and the Director of the Mint shied their castors in the ring and took a little part in this discussion. The whole civilized world was notified that we were on the eve of some great disaster, and the national banks were not slow in taking up the cry and putting in their oar in defense of the policy of the Administration. Then we began a discussion of it in this body and in the other House. No legislation resulted, and the great disaster threatened did not take place. Gold continued to come from abroad to a degree unusual in the history of a commercial people. Silver was dug out of the ground and put into use as money, and when there was a surplus beyond what the Government coined it went abroad. The exports of silver were greater than the imports, notwithstanding the prophecy on the part of the Treasury Department that if we did not repeal the law we should be flooded with silver, and that the gold would go abroad. Since that great impending disaster was threatened and prophesied we have added more than one hundred millions of gold to the hoarded gold in this country. The Treasury Department on the 10th day of this month held $211,880,000 net gold, with only $46,000,000 of silver.

The people abroad who took up these public declarations of the executive department of our Government must have been impressed with the idea that we were novices in financial legislation; that we had no financial capacity or financial ability, and that this country was being run upon a policy which must eventually and very soon bring it to disaster. In the summer of 1885, before Congress met, after the lecture the other House had received from the Executive, and which failed to do anything during that session, we were told repeatedly from high official authority that there was an impending disaster threatened, and that the Government was likely to be disgraced.

In the middle of July, 1885, there was a remarkable gathering of fifty-four national banks which came to the relief of this anti-bank Administration, as the Senator from Missouri would have us understand it is. Fifty-four banks got together in the city of New York, and there was the representative of this Administration, the Treasurer, with no more authority to be there than any private citizen of the United States, representing the Government of the United States in what they professed was its hour of peril, and proposing what they proclaimed to the civilized world as a step necessary to avert a disgrace to the Administration and to the nation. What did they do? What did that convention culminate in? In a loan to the Government of $6,000,000 gold to be exchanged for $6,000,000 of fractional currency, which by a law was exchangeable for greenbacks worth more in the commercial world that day than the gold which they exchanged for the fractional currency. They were careful not to exchange it for silver dollars, but to exchange it for that which was equivalent to gold.

I repeat what I have said before, that in the history of government administration there has never been such a spectacle presented, where one of the financial officers of the Government took part in a convention to proclaim to the world that the Government he represented was in financial distress and in danger of financial disgrace. When that convention met in New York nobody knew better than the Chief Executive and the Secretary of the Treasury and the Treasurer that that was a bald pretense. I use the term advisedly and deliberately when I say it was a bald pretense. It was a fraud on the public, a fraud upon the American people, and a fraud upon the civilized world. There was no necessity for that convention. There was no need of the Government borrowing money of any kind or any class to protect its honor.

At the time when the convention met there were $120,208,895 of gold in the Treasury of the United States. There were $17,322,310 more of gold certificates in the Treasury belonging to the Government of the United States, equivalent to gold coin, to be received and taken by everybody as gold coin. In addition to that, there were in the Treasury $14,400,000 of national notes, which could have been converted into coin on a moment's notice in the city of New York, certainly within six hours from the time the notice was given. Here was a total of $152,931,205 unused, unneeded, in the Treasury of the United States, besides the silver money, amounting to more than $100,000,000; and yet we were told that those banks had generously come to the relief of the Government of the United States by loaning it $6,000,000, the pay for which they eventually took in the greenback currency of the country.

I said deliberately, with intent, that it was a pretense; and what was it for? To bring about a panic among the people with reference to the issue of the silver dollar; to convince the people that it was a financial risk to continue the coining of two million silver dollars a month. That is what it was supposed would bring the representatives of the people to Executive opinion when they got here in December.

What was the disaster which was to be avoided? That we might avoid paying our bonds in the identical coin in which we had contracted that they should be paid; that the letter of the law and nothing more should be kept in view in reference to our dealing with the bondholding creditors of the Government, and that was all.

We are told that there is a great disaster impending now. It is the most remarkable exhibition in the history of the world (if not in the history of the world, at least in the history of this country), that no other Executive before this time has sent in his annual message dealing with one single question. All the great questions in which the people are interested, outside of the single question of the duties upon imports or the repeal of the revenue laws, have been avoided and left untouched. Our flag has been pulled down from off an American ship, our sailors and seamen have been insulted, arrested, and taken into a neighboring port without, as we think, the authority of law; and yet the President finds nothing to say upon that subject. He reserved himself entirely for this great impending disaster, and what is it? The surplus that is accumulating in the Treasury.

This is the new disaster, the biennial disaster, the disaster which comes in aid of a support to the Executive opinion, the disaster which is presented to frighten the country and to alarm the people into submitting to legislation that their judgment and their cool deliberation will not sanction. What is it? Fifty-five million dollars of surplus in the Treasury of the United States to-day. What a wonderful surplus is $55,000,000!

When this Administration came into power there was some surplus in the Treasury. The outgoing Administration had paid every month, month in and month out, about $10,000,000 towards the reduction of the public debt.

This Administration failed to pay a dollar of the public debt till the following February, they coming into power in March. During the long summer and fall and the early winter they had no money to pay out, with millions lying idle in the Treasury, and it was paid out only when the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] brought his indictment in this body against the Administration and public opinion compelled the payment of some portion of the $194,000,000 which had been drawing interest for all those eleven months or nearly, to the time when the first payment was made, with money in the Treasury to have paid off, if not all of it, a considerable part of it in the very first week of the Administration.

When this Administration came into power they had in the Treasury of the United States net $127,346,553 in gold. They had of gold certificates in the Treasury $40,426,930 more. Thus on the 28th day of February, four days before the Administration came into power, they had $167,813,483 in gold.

Mr. BUTLER. May I interrupt the Senator from Colorado for one moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. TELLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. I simply desire to inquire what is the question before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of the House of Representatives.

Mr. TELLER. If that is all the Senator wants to know, I will proceed.

Mr. BUTLER. That is what I wanted to inquire.

Mr. TELLER. I do not wonder that the Senators on the other side of the Chamber, who have made this Chamber ring, during every session I have been here for a number of years, with denunciations of the Republican party for its accumulation of money in the Treasury, do not want cold facts and figures. I do not wonder that they rise to say that this discussion is out of time. There will never be a time when they will want to discuss this matter. There will never be a time when the truth will be pleasant to their ears, with reference to this matter, for they know that if this had been an administration they did not help to elect no denunciation could be too severe and no language they could use would be sufficient to express their condemnation of an administration that would thus proceed.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator certainly will not accuse me of indulging in much stump-speaking. I certainly have not occupied much of the time of the Senate in stump-speaking.

Mr. TELLER. I am not complaining of any interruption the Senator makes.

In addition to the amount of gold I have spoken of, the Administration had seventy-two million and some odd thousands of silver dollars, every one of which might have been paid out by law, by right, upon the then accrued indebtedness of the United States in the shape of bonds, amounting very nearly to $200,000,000. They saw fit to continue to hoard the money in the Treasury, and when we came here in December, 1885, every dollar which had gone into the Treasury, save and except what was necessary for current expenses, had been there accumulated. At that time they had accumulated a considerable amount both of gold and silver, till the total accumulation in the Treasury of the United States amounted then to $287,156,965, which was payable, if they saw fit, upon the debt of the Government.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. TELLER. I will not yield to the Senator to make a speech. If he wishes to ask a question, he can do so.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to ask a single question.

Mr. TELLER. I will not yield for a speech such as the Senator attempted to make when the Senator from Kansas was on the floor.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I remember well when the honorable Senator was at one time a distinguished representative in the Cabinet of a distinguished President. I remember quite well that the policy of that administration, and of all former Republican administrations, was to pay the public debt in the very best money known to the world. What I should like to know is, whether that distinguished member of that Cabinet ever protested against the policy of paying the Government's debt as the Republican party always paid it, and if that is true, why does he criticise a Democratic administration for pursuing the same policy?

Mr. TELLER. I did not protest; nobody protested; the country was satisfied with the payment of the debt by the late administration and its predecessors. They paid it out month by month, not sporadically, not at the demand of Wall street, not at the demand of a bankers' convention, not for the purpose of putting up stocks or putting them down, not in the interest of speculation and the banks, but they paid it off by a system, month in and month out, during the many years that the late administration reduced the public debt, in a manner which has been the admiration and the wonder of the world. I had no occasion to protest, and I only protested when this Administration, for nearly eleven months, never paid a dollar of the public indebtedness, and allowed it to draw interest.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I submit to the Senator that he ought to allow me to interrupt him for a moment just at that particular point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. TELLER. I will yield for a question, but I am not going to yield for a speech. I know the Senator's method of interruption.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The Senator will remember that about the time the Democratic Administration came into power it was predicted by the retiring Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McCulloch, that the country would be upon a silver basis in less than thirty days. The Treasury had been depleted of its gold. There was nothing to maintain the payment of the interest on the public debt, or that portion of the public debt to which the surplus should be applied. With this prediction we were confronted. The Treasury proceeded to strengthen itself, and it did so in a very legitimate way. That is all I have to say.

Mr. TELLER. That is not a question, and it is not a fair statement of the facts, as the records will show. It is not a fair statement of the facts of the financial history of this country.

Mr. MCPHERSON rose.

Mr. TELLER. I decline to be interrupted now.

There was no such prophecy that this country would be on a silver basis. There was an effort made by the Secretary of the Treasury then, as it has been made since, to destroy the confidence of the people in the silver money of the country, and he did predict disasters if its coinage was continued, as his successor did.

So far from this Administration having taken any steps to strengthen the Treasury or to increase the gold, they took no steps at all, unless it was to keep the money in the Treasury. They knew if they paid out $10,000,000 for bonds in April that a considerable proportion of that money would get back into the Treasury in May, if they knew anything about the finances of the country at all. They knew that the way to get the customs duties in gold was to pay out the gold and put it in circulation among the people, if they had any ideas at all of the finances of the country. I complain, and a respectable party here complain, that they declined to pay out the money which was in the Treasury, but allowed it to accumulate, and now, I say, when they come here and tell us, as the foundation of an attack upon the revenue system of the country, that they make this attack because there is an impending disaster, it is not true and it is not made in good faith. They were willing, in the interest of bondholders and in the interest of the banks, to accumulate much more money in the Treasury than they have now, to leave the debt unpaid, and to let the people suffer for want of the money. Fifty-five million dollars is the surplus to-day, they say.

Mr. PLUMB. Without the subsidiary silver.

Mr. TELLER. That does not take into account, as is suggested, the subsidiary silver. Of course they have declared that that was of no value, practically, in all their treatment. I admit it does not take into account the one hundred millions of gold held by the Treasury Department for the purpose of the redemption of greenbacks, which the Wall street banker, whom they brought and put into the Treasury, changed from the assets of the country to the debit side; who, instead of making it a credit made it a liability, and thus said to everybody everywhere that we had been committing a fraud upon the public when we said we had $100,000,000 of gold put down in the assets of the country, and that it was a mistake; the more gold you had the worse you were off, if he was correct, and he put it on the liability side of the Government.

Mr. President, is there such an impending danger? Have we so much money, or are we likely to have so much money, that we must destroy the established business of the country in haste, immediately, for the purpose of reducing the revenues? I shall not now discuss the question whether it will reduce the revenue; that question will come up later; but is there any necessity for haste, for fright, for alarm, as indicated by the President's message, with the $55,000,000 of surplus? Last year our customs duties increased over the year before $24,000,000; our sales of lands increased over the sales of the preceding year $3,000,000; our internal revenue on tobacco alone was $2,000,000 more the last year than it was the year before. There was an increase of $34,000,000 of revenue to the Government, mainly made up of items which are uncertain in their character and unstable.

Suppose we should have financial disasters all over the world. Such disasters come occasionally. Suppose we should have what are called hard times this year. Suppose we had had such a state of affairs last year, where would have been your increased amount of duties on imports? The people would have been too poor to have bought the imported articles, the duties would not have been paid, and you would not have had any surplus, and so you could strike off from the three items I have mentioned $27,000,000. If that had been done, suppose we had passed a deficiency bill of nearly $6,000,000, as it passed this body at least, and it ought to have been $10,000,000. A deficiency bill which would have properly discharged the obligations of the Government and maintained its courts and its institutions in a proper manner would have been $10,000,000 instead of being nothing at all. Suppose we had passed a river and harbor bill of $5,000,000 or $10,000,000, and the disasters I have spoken of should have occurred. There would not then have been a dollar of surplus in the Treasury to-day. We should not have been in the condition, I admit, that we were when the Republican party entered upon the administration of the Government in 1861, because we should have had ample credit, whether we had any money in the Treasury or not.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] proceeded to speak in terms of great severity of the national banks and to refer to the bill which Mr. Hayes vetoed. I did not feel particularly injured by what he said, for I voted for the bill, and would have voted for it over the veto if an opportunity had been presented. I advocated the bill on the floor of the Senate. I condemn the conduct of the banks in that matter as much as the Senator does, and I think the banks did themselves an injury at that time from which they never will recover. But it comes with a bad grace from the Senator to say, "I would not give the banks the opportunity to contract the currency; I would not give them the opportunity to issue more and then less, and so keep the financial affairs of the country in a disturbed condition." Does the Senator remember that the first utterance from this Administration to this body and the other House was a recommendation that the $346,000,000 of the people's money, drawing no interest and doing money duty as no paper ever did money duty in the history of finances in the world, should be surrendered, with the statement that the national banks would be glad to issue paper money for the accommodation of the public? Yet the Senator approves that, I suppose, because he sets himself up here as the champion of the financial management of this Administration.

All that has been said about the financial affairs of this Government being under the control of national banks can not be controverted with a national-bank president as Secretary of the Treasury to begin with, with a national-bank officer as Treasurer, with the meetings with the representatives of national banks when the Government had no necessity for their aid, or their assistance, or their counsel; but more than all, with the recommendation that the $346,000,000 should be destroyed, it costing the Government nothing to keep it afloat, practically doing duty as money wherever the English tongue is spoken, should take the place of a national note to be issued, because the national banks would be kind enough and generous enough to come to the relief of the Government with the paltry sum of three or four million, or five or six million dollars of gold when there was no need of it. I say if there was anything needed to convince the people that this is a national-bank Administration, that it is controlled from Wall street, you need not go to the character of the men appointed to office, but taking the utterances of the officials, from the Chief Executive down to the lowest officer who is allowed to address the public on the question of finance, the proof can be found so that no man, however zealous he may be, dare gainsay it.

Mr. BUTLER. I will inquire again, if the inquiry is not out of order, what is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the resolution reported yesterday from the Committee on Appropriations? The resolutions will be read at the desk, if the Senator desires.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like very much to have the resolution read and acted upon. If these stump-speeches are to continue I shall move to organize the Senate into a town-meeting, or some other meeting, and propose to divide time. I do not care to sit here and be compelled to listen to stump-speeches, when, perhaps, we might avoid them. I therefore hope that whatever is to be considered by the Senate will be considered; and I ask for the reading of the pending resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read by the Chief Clerk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 16, 1887.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, December 22, 1887, they stand adjourned until Wednesday, January 4, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I believe the question, as presented by the resolution, is whether Congress shall adjourn for two weeks in this crisis or stay here and attend to the public business. From the discussions which have been had I am satisfied that we ought not to adjourn. We are told that the only financial remedy which can be had—and that is the issue—has been proposed by the President. We are told that the country is suffering grievously on account of the surplus in the Treasury; that there is a large amount of money locked up; and I am satisfied that it will remain locked up a long time if it is not liberated before that issue is disposed of.

The issue, as I understand it, is whether the American people have come to the conclusion that they will stop doing their own work and hire it done, and send what money we have out of the country with which to buy the necessaries of life, and leave our people without employment. I believe that nations, as well as individuals, get rich by doing their own work, and that fact is pretty well illustrated by the history of this country. Every time we have had a tariff so that we had to do our own work, we have grown rich. See what has happened since 1860. We destroyed at least $8,000,000,000 of property in the war. If I remember correctly, we had $16,000,000,000 of property in the United States in 1860. In 1870 we had over $30,000,000,000, or about $24,000,000,000 estimated on a gold basis. In 1880 we had something over $43,000,000,000, and we were then pretty nearly equal to Great Britain. A fair estimate of the value of the property of the United States to-day, according to the ratio of increase since 1860, is not less than $60,000,000,000. We are now far in excess of Great Britain. In 1860 the wealth of the United States per capita was $514. It is now over $1,000. This is the result of doing our own work. There is no other visible agency to produce it.

To give up our markets to outsiders, to stop doing our own work, is the way to get poor, and that is the only way suggested by the President to dispose of the surplus revenue that is in the Treasury. This process will also dispose of the revenue now in the pockets of the people, because if you send your money out of the country to buy goods you can not either keep it in the Treasury or in circulation among the people.

We are now on a coin basis. Our gold and silver has a commodity value for exportation as well as a money value for circulation at home. If we hire our work done abroad we shall have to export gold and silver to pay for it. Then come contraction, hard times, idleness, and starvation. When we surrender our markets to Europe we must also surrender our surplus cash. This scheme is a good plan for draining the Treasury, but a bad one for our people who want employment and good wages. Of course, the question of the tariff depends in every case upon the circumstances of the country. If we had as neighbors two hundred million people who were receiving higher wages than we are, and who were rich and able to buy our goods, we would want to give our people employment by obtaining their markets for our manufactures and supply them with our commodities which we would have to sell. There is no market in the world of that kind for us. We pay the highest wages of any people, and consequently if we throw our markets open, other people who work for less wages will supply us.

If our tariff procures too much revenue some legislation may be necessary; but the question is, what kind of legislation we ought to have. Our markets are exceedingly valuable; sixty million people, better clothed and better fed than any other people on earth, are large consumers and most desirable customers. We paid last year over $683,000,000 for commodities produced in Europe and Asia by cheap labor. That enormous sum was paid by our people for commodities produced by the labor of other countries at a rate of wages that would be starvation prices in this country. We only charged the foreign peddlers (through courtesy called importers) who sold these commodities in our markets about $217,000,000 for this privilege. It appears we have not charged enough to keep these importers out of our country. Still the President proposes to sell our markets cheaper, so that more goods may be brought in and less manufactured here. He assumes that the money raised by a sale of our markets is so much taxes levied upon the industries and necessities of our people. In this I think he is mistaken. I do not pretend to deny that every dollar raised by the tariff is a tax, but it occurs to me that it is a tax upon the industries and necessities of other countries, and not upon our own people; and the tax thus levied, so far from burdening the industries of this country, protects them by charging others for the rights and privileges they enjoy in our markets. The fact that the people of England, and not the people of the United States, ask for free trade ought to have put the President on inquiry as to who pays the tax created by our tariff. The effect of this kind of taxation is illustrated, as before stated, by the rapidity with which we acquire wealth under the operations of the tariff.

Our Democratic friends tell the laboring class that they will be greatly benefited if they do not have so much work to do; that if they do not do any of their own work, but hire Asiatics and Europeans to do it, they can live in luxury. The trouble is, however, they do not tell them how they are going to get money to buy these luxuries produced by cheap labor in other countries if they have no work to perform by which they can earn money.

There is another way to regulate the amount of money to be produced from the sale of our markets. Instead of selling them so cheap that any foreign country can buy them and make money at it, raise the price so that neither Asia nor Europe can afford to buy them. In other words, make the tariff prohibitory on articles in the production of which there is competition at home.

I am opposed to giving away our markets; our people want them; they want the privilege of supplying them with their own manufactures and their own products, and they have a right to them; they live here and pay taxes. The Europeans and Asiatics do not support our Government and have no right to the privileges of our markets. All we have to do, if there is too much revenue, is to raise the tariff, do more work at home, buy less from abroad, and give our people a chance. The question must be discussed and understood before we adopt the President's plan, which is to throw open our markets and put the laboring men of this country in competition with the cheap labor of the Old World.

The situation has materially changed since Democrats and Whigs discussed this question in the olden times. The millions of China are now aroused to the advantages of modern civilization; they have been among us and all over Europe and have learned the art of manufacturing every commodity which can be produced in any country. Take off the tariff and our markets will be flooded not only by the cheap labor of Europe, but by the labor of the starving millions of overcrowded China.

Our laborers feel the sharp contest when they are put in competition with Chinese labor in this country—a contest from which they shrink, and from which we are legislating to protect them by excluding the Chinese. But if there were no duties on imported goods from China the Chinamen could remain at home and compete with the labor of this country, deprive our people of their markets, and reduce their wages to starvation prices.

The conditions have changed in the last forty years in another respect. The means of transportation have vastly improved. Freight is so cheap that all the laborers of the world under the rules of free trade would be practically placed on an equality. It costs comparatively nothing to transport goods from either Europe or Asia to the United States. A very few cents will transport enough clothing for the use of a family for a whole year. The cost of transportation will not make any material difference between wages in America and wages in Asia. The only protection the laborer has is our tariff. Remove that, and the Asiatics, residing at home and subsisting on rice, free from all the burdens of our country, can enjoy all of its advantages. The laborers of this country must work for Chinese wages and starve if we give away our markets.

The free-traders tell the hatter that if there were no tariff on boots he could buy boots cheaper, but they do not tell him where he could get money to buy boots with if there was no tariff on hats. They tell the shoemaker that if there were no tariff on cloth he could buy his coat cheaper, but they do not tell him where he could get the money with which to buy a coat if the paupers of the Old World manufacture all the boots. They tell the farmer that if there were no tariff on dry goods it would not cost so much to clothe his family, but they do not tell him where he could get money with which to buy dry goods if his home market, which is 95 per cent. of his entire market, were taken away or even reduced one-half by the inability of the people, who would be thrown out of employment by free trade, to buy corn and potatoes, and who would be forced for want of other employment, and for want of money, to raise their own corn and potatoes or starve.

Before we come to the conclusion that it is necessary to impoverish ourselves for the purpose of depleting the Treasury, it occurs to me that we ought to examine the whole subject and see if there is no other mode of disposing of the surplus revenue. Before we decide to adopt the President's plan and grow poorer and poorer rather than to raise the tariff and grow richer and richer, we ought to examine the whole subject and ascertain whether or not poverty or a plethoric Treasury are the only alternatives which exist.

That is the question to be discussed. It will take some time to settle that question; and inasmuch as it is cool now, in the beginning of the session, as the discussion has opened beautifully, I should like to hear it go on. I have been very much interested in the discussion. There may be some things which might be done with the surplus money. It has been suggested that it is unbecoming in us as a nation to allow all our seaports to remain entirely unprotected when we have plenty of money to build fortifications. All other nations support some kind of a navy, so as not to be at the mercy of their enemies; and it has been suggested that if Uncle Sam could spare the money it would be good policy to have a few seaworthy ships of war. It might be well to pay a little attention to the necessities of commerce and not wholly ignore the estimates of the engineers in charge of the improvements on our rivers and harbors. Something might be done for the improvement of the Mississippi River if we had the money.

These enterprises would give employment to the people, and we would be doing our own work, if we could afford to spend some money for these purposes. Since the Secretary of the Treasury finds no difficulty in circulating silver certificates, the President might, in his discretion, purchase four millions instead of two millions' worth of silver per month, and thus encourage silver mining and relieve not only the Treasury but the stringency of the money market. No particular harm would result to any class if this should raise the price of silver so that the wheat and cotton growers of India would have a less percentage of advantage over the producers of these commodities in the United States than they now enjoy while buying cheap silver in America and selling it at par in India.

There may be other worthy objects that need the expenditure of money. It seems to me that we might look around and see what money is needed, and if we are getting too much money we may think it best for us to raise the tariff and reduce the revenue by that method rather than to reduce it by giving away our markets and pauperizing the people. These questions can be discussed now, while it is cool and the subject is up. Why draw our salaries and waste the next two weeks by going home and leaving the country in a crisis? I am in favor of staying here, and I shall vote against the pending resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I only desire to say a word respecting the pending resolution. The Committee on Appropriations reported the resolution, believing that there was a general sentiment in favor of an adjournment for the holidays. The resolution came to us from the House of Representatives without a division in that body.

I sympathize very much in what has been said by the Senator from Kansas as to what ought to be done, but I do not see that the Senate can very rapidly promote many of those things by staying in session, in the condition in which the House of Representatives now is.

It is well understood, I suppose, in this body that there are only three ways of getting rid of the surplus. One is the way suggested by the Senator from Kansas, which is a very good one, and now wholly within the control of the Administration; another is to appropriate the money, and another is to change our existing revenue laws.

It is perfectly clear that revenue measures must originate in the House of Representatives. We waited for two years in this body for a proposition to come to us from the House of Representatives looking to a change of our revenue laws. From the beginning of 1885 to this time no such measure has come. There is now no pretense of a proposition that any such measure can or will come from the House of Representatives between this day and the 4th day of January. Therefore, it is impossible for us to do anything in that time towards that end.

Mr. VEST. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. Did not the Republican party in the House of Representatives vote twice during the last Congress against considering at all the question of reducing taxation?

Mr. ALLISON. I am not going into a discussion as to what took place in the House of Representatives. It is enough for the Senator from Missouri to know that his party was in a large majority in the last House, that it is in a majority in the present House, and that it is responsible for the legislation so far as the House of Representatives is concerned.

The Senate has at this time no power to act upon any of the measures suggested by the Senator from Kansas. Therefore, I do not see that we can promote or advance in any way the interests which we all think ought to be considered and advanced, by refusing the House of Representatives what they ask in the resolution, and what they have asked without a division as respects party.

Mr. PLUMB. If we do not adjourn, the other House can hardly adjourn. The other House, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] well suggests, and as I was about to observe, will therefore go to work. It poses as the friend of the people, as the foe of all monopolies, and all that sort of thing, and practically does nothing. It needs the competition, in the first place, of a good example. It has always had one practically on the part of the Senate, but it might be enforced a little stronger at the present time. It needs not only that, but it needs the focus of public opinion, which it will get if the Senate refuses to adjourn.

We can take up here and pass the bills which were passed at the last Congress, and which the other House never even took off its table. Hundreds of bills went, it was said, from the Senate, bills of a public character and bills of a private character, and they were laid on the Speaker's table, and were never taken off at all during the last Congress. As the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] informs me, there were four hundred and eighty bills in regard to which they never did the Senate the courtesy nor the public business the decency even to refer to committees and give any chance by which they might be considered.

This is not a question of comparison. It is a question of every body doing what it considers to be its duty. As I said, we can get off our Calendar and out of our committees largely the bills which we passed at the last session. We shall thereby have the decks cleared for action in such a way that if we can not do anything else we can sit around and see the dog-fight on the tariff business in the other House, and then is the time I should like to have a little leisure. But if the other House should send us a revenue bill, we could then take it up freed from the impedimentum of a great Calendar, overloaded with bills from committees which will be striving all the time for precedence, and which might crowd out the great revenue measure. It is to be an era of discussion, of full discussion, I hope, and we ought to get rid of the frills and furbelows of legislation, like the bill of my friend on my left [Mr. BLAIR] for the appropriation of $77,000,000 for education and things of that kind, and get ready for the serious matter of reducing the surplus.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I like a little fun occasionally, but I think of all the disgusting spectacles in the world, it is the affectation and hypocrisy and humbuggery which we have seen in this body to-day. There is not a Senator upon the floor who does not know that what has been said about our staying here is absolutely bosh and hypocrisy. There is not a Senator upon this floor who does not know that there will not be one single thing done in either House of Congress until after the holidays; and yet we have been getting up before the country and posing as being anxious to do the public business, and the people demand it, and all such stuff and nonsense!

What is the need of such talk? The public understands it perfectly well. I suppose a great deal of it was said for the benefit of newspapers and the reporters. We must stay here and work for the dear people! The eyes of the country are on us! The focus of public opinion, as the Senator from Kansas says, will make the House of Representatives move!

Sir, I do not like to even appear to be disrespectful to anybody, but I repeat, it is the idlest, flimsiest, shallowest humbuggery I have ever known in my life. I can stay here as well as any other Senator, if the rest of the body propose to stay, and if the Senate will stay here and go to work I shall try and be in my seat; but if we are to stay here from day to day, and hear what we have heard to-day, stump-speeches, then I simply propose not to submit to it as far as I can help it.

As I said awhile ago, if we are going to have a mere exhibition of stump-oratory upon this floor, let us organize this body into a town meeting and divide time, first one side and then the other, have applause in the galleries, and all the other appliances and appurtenances of a town meeting; but if the Senate is going to preserve its decorum, as I understand it, let us either concur in the resolution of the House of Representatives, and come back on the 4th of January, or go to work in earnest, and adjourn from day to day.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know who constituted the Senator from South Carolina a public censor——

Mr. BUTLER. I am not a public censor——

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know who gave him any warrant to impugn motives on this floor or elsewhere.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not a public censor——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PLUMB. Unless the Senator is a public censor he is a common scold.

Mr. BUTLER. If we had two or three common scolds in the Senate we certainly should get along a great deal better.

Mr. PLUMB. Each one may speak for himself in regard to his view about what is called public opinion. I do not think I demean myself at all in saying that I have respect for it; yet if I represented, in whole or in part, a State on this floor in which public opinion was stifled, I might speak more contemptibly about it. I have spoken here under just as much serenity as the Senator speaks, with responsibility to people who read the newspapers, who cast their own votes and have them counted.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator be kind enough to explain why he assumes——

Mr. PLUMB. I do not propose to be catechised, nor do I propose to be held up to censure in the way——

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator be kind enough to state why he has——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not yield.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas is entitled to the floor in his own right.

Mr. BUTLER. I shall seek the floor in my own right hereafter.

Mr. PLUMB. When it comes to the point that a Senator can not oppose or favor a measure on the floor without subjecting himself to such censorship and such reflections as have been uttered by the Senator from South Carolina, I think it is time to have the Senate purged.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, in one thing I agree with the Senator from South Carolina. I agree that it is hardly worth while for us to deny the other House the usual privilege of an adjournment over the holidays; but I do not agree with him in his view of the debate to-day. I have been very much interested in it. It has brought to the attention of the Senate, I think, the folly of some features of the President's message, that he is endeavoring to create a scare and alarm about the condition of our country because it has fortunately for it $55,000,000 of surplus revenue in the Treasury. If it be true that there is such a state of alarm, such a state of panic as is expressed by the language of the President, certainly a Democratic House friendly to him ought not to adjourn over the holidays.

I do not believe that there is any such occasion for alarm. I do not believe that anybody is alarmed. I think that the language of the President was entirely too strong, and that the debate to-day illustrates the fact that while there are honest differences of opinion to be discussed in the Senate on questions which ought to be approached gradually and considerately, yet it is right and proper for members on this side of the Chamber to call attention to the folly of the House of Representatives in suddenly adjourning without even an organization, with no committees appointed and no preparation made for this great peril. Therefore it is proper to make some reasonable comments upon the President's message and upon the state of events by which we are surrounded.

The $55,000,000 of surplus revenue referred to in the message is less than was in the Treasury at any time from the 1st of July after the President was sworn into office to February following when he first commenced buying bonds. There have been several times in the history of this Administration, during the nearly three years it has existed, when the surplus revenue was greater than it is to-day, and when the same cry of alarm might have been made.

It seems to me it is reasonable and right when such a state of affairs exists, when the country is about to be frightened and business men are alarmed lest something terrible should happen because the money of the country is gathered into the Treasury, that the humbug should be at least punctured, or exploded, or explained away to a certain extent. We shall undoubtedly have to approach the questions which have been suggested here to-day, and I trust that in a temperate and fair manner we shall expose our differences and express our opinions.

I do not regret the scenes which have occurred here to-day, and the speeches which have been made, which I consider very good on both sides of the question; but I agree entirely with what is said by the Senator from South Carolina in this, that we can not now refuse to comply with the request of the other House to adjourn. Such a refusal never has been made. I have known several times before when debates of this kind have sprung up and some talk has been had about husbanding the holidays and doing something, but in my thirty-odd years' experience I do not know a single case where it has resulted in any good. The practical effect of our refusing to adjourn and to pass the resolution would be that by to-morrow the other House would be without a quorum, whether we consent to their adjournment or not, and the next day there would not be a quorum of the Senate, in my judgment. Therefore it is simply folly to refuse an adjournment.

I shall vote for the resolution; not that I would introduce it; not that I do not think there is plenty of business here for us to do; but I know very well, by long experience in Congress, and it has been the case for nearly the hundred years in which the Government has existed, that it is impossible to hold Congress to work during the holidays; the members will go home to their families. It is idle, therefore, for us to waste any further time in delaying the passage of the resolution, though I do not at all regret the debate, but think it has been very useful and very instructive.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss the question whether a Senator in this body has a right to call other Senators to task for discussing a question which that Senator thinks is out of taste. I leave that by simply saying that whatever may be the sentiment or the practice in some sections of the country with reference to the freedom of public utterance, it has not reached the Senate, and it is not likely to reach the Senate, and the Senate is not likely to constitute a censor or a critic.

I agree with the Senator from South Carolina when he says there has been a good deal of humbug here to-day. It occurred to me that it was the greatest possible evidence of humbug when a Senator stood up and said that the President of the United States had not, under existing law, the authority to buy bonds, when the Chief Executive, whom he supports so heartily and so thoroughly, says in his message that he, or his financial officer, has bought $27,000,000 of bonds. It did strike me that there was a good deal of humbug in that, and that there was a good deal of humbug in some other things which were said, but I did not think it was exactly the thing for me to get up and say that it was humbug or hypocrisy for a Senator to say this or to say that.

I simply wish to say to the Senator from South Carolina and his associates that they can not escape the discussion of this question, and they can not escape it because they think the other House is not going to send to us a bill which will enable us to discuss it according to the rules which prevail in some other bodies, where a speech must be upon the pending question, and germane to the question before the body. We shall find opportunities to discuss this whole economic question, and we intend to do it, and the gentlemen on the other side, who say they stand with both feet on the platform laid down by the President, and then straddle wide enough to get across the continent in the protection of things which are in their interest, and theirs alone, will have ample opportunity for discussion. Senators from every section of this great Republic, who represent every class of the great American people in the Senate, and who do not believe in playing second fiddle to any nation, a tail to an English kite, who believe that the American laborer is interested in this question, and not the American manufacturer, and who are ready to discuss it from any standpoint, and at any time, will never be deterred by having it said in their presence that it is a stump-speech, nor will they be deterred by the fear of criticism, or by the fear, fortunately, that if they should differ from the Executive the public patronage would not be theirs.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I think that the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Kansas have worked themselves into a frenzy without the slightest provocation on my part. I have not said one word about their speeches except that they were stump-speeches. I do not think they will deny that they were. I simply characterized in language perhaps which was not entirely parliamentary the action of the entire body in pretending, as I insist, to desire that Congress should not adjourn, when everybody wanted to adjourn. I said nothing whatever about the right of any Senator to speak upon any subject he chose. I said not one word about cutting off the discussion of the President's message or any other public question before the country.

If the Senator from Colorado or the Senator from Kansas imagines for one instant that I desire to avoid any discussson upon these propositions, they are both very much mistaken. On the contrary, upon an appropriate occasion and at a proper time, instead of attempting to prevent it, I shall invite discussion upon that and all other public questions.

I was about to apologize to the Senate for the use of language which, as I said, perhaps might have been unparliamentary, but inasmuch as the Senator from Ohio in characterizing the message of the President of the United States refers to it as a piece of humbuggery, I think that I am justified in applying that term to our own body without being disrespectful. Therefore, I shall not withdraw it, as I was about to do, but, following his illustrious example, I believe I will let the language stand just as it was uttered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the resolution.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES] is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. I do not know how he would vote, if present, on this question.

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. Can his colleague say how he would vote on this question?

Mr. COCKRELL. He has gone home.

Mr. DAWES. I am unable to say how my colleague would vote.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator know how his colleague has acted or would act?

Mr. COCKRELL. He has gone home.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would observe that debate is not in order during roll-call.

Mr. DAWES. I think the Senator from Alabama ought to consider himself free to vote his own sentiments.

Mr. PUGH. Then I vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. I do not know how he would vote, and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote I would vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 37, nays 19; as follows:

ATKINSON'S COINAGE REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State, accompanied by the report of Mr. Edward Atkinson, of Massachusetts, who was specially designated by me under the provisions of successive acts of Congress in that behalf, to visit the financial centers of Europe in order to ascertain the feasibility of establishing, by international arrangement, a fixity of rates between the two precious metals in free coinage of both.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, December 20, 1887.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that the message of the President and the accompanying documents be printed, the usual number. To show its character I send a letter to the Secretary to be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 19, 1887.

MY DEAR GENERAL: To-day the President will probably send in a message conveying the report of Mr. Edward Atkinson upon the condition and prospects of the "silver question" in Europe.

Together with Mr. Atkinson's report is a translation of Soetbeer's "Materialen," by Professor Taussig, of Harvard, which contains a perfect mine of information on this highly important subject.

It would be highly advisable for authority for the printing of this valuable treatise to be given by Congress at the earliest day.

The whole is in type, and I heartily recommend it to your favorable action.

Very truly, yours,

T. F. BAYARD.

Hon. CHAS. F. MANDERSON,
Chairman of the Senate Committee on Printing.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the message and accompanying documents be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message and documents will be referred to the Committee on Finance and printed.

Mr. BECK. I rise to inquire what is the effect of the motion of the Senator from Vermont to refer the communication of the Secretary of State to the Committee on Finance? I hope it does not interfere with the printing of the usual number.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order has been made.

Mr. MORRILL. That was included.

Mr. BECK. The usual number will be printed before reference?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to print the message, with the accompanying documents, has been made.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GRAY. I desire——

Mr. SHERMAN. I have been recognized. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business; but I will give way to morning business.

Mr. GRAY introduced a bill (S. 1062) to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building at Wilmington, Del.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 1063) for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of Robert J. Baugness, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1064) for the relief of L. J. Warden; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill (S. 1065) to authorize the distribution of certain moieties to the late officers of customs at the port of San Francisco; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 1066) exempting American coastwise sailing vessels piloted by their licensed masters, or by a United States pilot, from the obligation to pay State pilots for services not rendered; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRYE. I also introduce a bill relating to imported liquor, and commend its very early and earnest attention to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (S. 1067) relating to imported liquors was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STANFORD introduced a bill (S. 1068) for the relief of J. G. Fell, Edward Hooper, and George Burnham; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

Mr. DOLPH. When the resolution for adjournment was taken up I had the floor, intending to make some remarks on the joint resolution (S. R. 2) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, empowering Congress to legislate upon the subjects of marriage and divorce, and prohibiting bigamy and polygamy.

It is so late now that I shall not ask the Senate to hear me to-day, but I give notice that to-morrow, after the morning business, I shall ask leave to take up the resolution for the purpose of making some remarks. They will be brief, however, and I hope no Senator will ask me to give way for a resolution or a bill.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to make a suggestion in reference to the order of business. The educational bill is the unfinished business. I have been notified by several Senators that they desire to make speeches somewhat at length, and it is obvious that to enter on its discussion to-morrow would be of very little service to the ultimate disposition of the bill; and as the Senator from Oregon desires to make a speech to-morrow on another matter, of which he has given notice, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the education bill be postponed and be made the unfinished business for January 4, the day to which the adjournment is to take place.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not wish to oppose any motion the Senator from New Hampshire may make in respect to that bill; I expect him to have the entire management of it; but I want to be heard for a few moments this evening. I wish to make a statement, and not a statement alone, but to produce some records that will verify the statement I make. While I am not rising now to oppose the motion, I am simply doing what other Senators have done this afternoon, taking advantage of the situation to make a few remarks.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Virginia to yield the floor?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. No, sir; I do not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair begs the Senator's pardon.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. As an earnest advocate of this bill from the time the Senator from New Hampshire introduced it I desire to state to him again that I can not indorse this book which he has had laid on our desks. I see it is copyrighted. Of course the Senator had a right to copyright it. It ought to have been a kind of a Know-Nothing blue-book. In it here are the indorsements of Senators of what is called the Blair educational bill, which indorsements were made two years after the bill had passed and by Senators who had earnestly opposed it from different standpoints on this floor. I object to that going to the country as a book or as a public document, printed in almost the form of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD save and except the back of it. I will take for instance the indorsement of one of the Senators, and I do this for a reason which is not to be attributed to any malice on my part, but because of recent occurrences in my own State and among the representatives that are there in its General Assembly. I can not read it in this light; but it is the indorsement of Senator Mahone, of Virginia.

The Senator from New Hampshire knows that Senator Mahone, of Virginia, opposed that bill, and that this indorsement which is in his book was written two years after the bill had passed the Senate. If there be any doubt about it, I have the RECORD here. I want to call special attention to it because of the fact that in the Virginia General Assembly a few days ago an accusation was made that statements which I had made on this floor were untrue.

I have here the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 17, part 2, of the Congress, in which that Senator appeared as absent, when the Senator from New Hampshire and other Senators on this floor asked me to go into his committee-room and get him to vote for or against the bill. I met him in his committee-room. He was absent from the roll-call, but not from the Capitol.

I have here the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of two years later, in which the words appear that are copied into this pamphlet or bill of the Senator from New Hampshire. I do not propose to stand in this Senate Chamber under an aspersion of that sort coming from my own State and verified here by what appears to be a record that will be wrung around among the people with whom I live. If we are to have bills introduced and passed here, let us have bills, but not such statements as are made in this book to bear out the records of men that contravene the records of the Congress itself as is shown by these books.

I never have paraded any record of my own in that form, or in any other. I have never yet, and hope I never will. I have never had the opportunity, I should rather say, to occupy a committee-room from which to issue a personal document and a personal record after my term had expired in the Senate; and I do object to sending out this which as far as it can be is a statement made that goes to a question of veracity between me and a representative Virginian in the house of delegates, put into a document of the Senate. I do not think the Senator from New Hampshire will ask to have it remain there until he shall have stated on this floor that this statement made here is taken from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD made two years after the opposition of my former colleague to this bill.

I am willing to rest my statements on the RECORD, and I will be pardoned by Senators and by all gentlemen everywhere for making this statement, when they read in the journals of the house of delegates of Virginia not only what has seemingly appeared to be a record here, but that my word was not good because of the fact that the record was against me. I say that this is no record. Here is the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of 1883, here is the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of 1885, and I ask the Senator from New Hampshire now on this floor to say which one of these records is right. I will carry the books to him, I will show them, I will read to him the remarks from each one of them, and let it go back to Virginia whether I have told the truth or whether the statement there made against me was correct.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, the pamphlet to which the Senator has alluded contains brief statements, selected sentences of the views of Senators as delivered on this floor touching the merits of what is known as the educational bill. That bill, as is known, has passed the Senate on two different occasions, once in the year 1884 and again in the year 1886.

During the vacation, knowing that this bill would be again pending, and there being a vast amount of matter accumulated in the way of argument and data bearing upon it, I performed the labor of making some selections for the purpose of elucidating the subject in such a way as to save the time of the Senate; and the passage to which the Senator refers is one of the results. Embodied upon its covers is some other additional matter. The body of the book is simply copied from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD itself, the record of the two debates preceding the passage of the bill in 1884 and 1886.

Of course it never occurred to me that there ever was any occasion, in taking from the remarks of Senators in reference to the merits of the bill, to make a designation of the occasion of the debate in which those remarks were uttered, whether in 1884 or 1886, they being on the same measure. The remarks of Senator Mahone in favor of the bill are taken from the debate of 1886, the last debate, when, as I understand, he favored the measure, voting for it. I have no knowledge in reference to the circumstances which are averred by the Senator with reference to the action of Mr. Mahone on the first occasion when the bill was pending in and passed by the Senate. In committee he favored the original bill as introduced in 1881, as reported in the Forty-seventh Congress. The bill passed in 1884 was considerably modified. I can not say that Senator Mahone favored those modifications. I think he did not. I am not aware whether he opposed the bill on its final passage, and I can not say.

I sincerely take great pleasure in stating what I think no man who knows the Senator from Virginia will doubt for a moment, that his veracity, so far as I know, is not to be questioned anywhere. I take him to be a man of the truest and highest veracity, and that he has stated nothing on this floor or elsewhere but what he sincerely believes to be true; but so far as the record goes it bears out any citation which has been made in this pamphlet.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, I am greatly obliged to the Senator for saying that he never heard me tell a story. I should like, also, to know why the Senator can not recollect that he asked me to go to the committee-room and request Senator Mahone to come here and vote. My persistence in this statement, I think, is justified by the fact that I have been assaulted in my own house of delegates in Virginia. The Senator from New Hampshire and, I think, Senator Cameron, then of Wisconsin, asked me to go. Now, there is this distinction to be drawn, and I want it clearly drawn, and I want it done on this floor, where it will answer the allegation brought against me down there in my own State among my own people. The bill of 1881 that the committee agreed upon was a bill providing that the money should be disbursed through Federal officers. The last Blair educational bill, as it came into the Senate and was perfected, was opposed because the money was to be disbursed by State school boards. I want the distinction clearly drawn, and I want it to go into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that I make it. The journals of the house of delegates of the State of Virginia will be responsible for what is said there.

When the change was made the Senator from New Hampshire does not recollect. I am sorry for it. I know a change overcame the mind of my colleague, and that is the cause of the accusation brought against me in Virginia. That is the change, and from that time on he was opposed to the bill until, as this book shows, two years after it was passed, he gave voice to the world, appearing in a new CONGRESSIONAL RECORD made up by the Senator from New Hampshire and copyrighted. I want it understood, and I intend to have it understood, that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and the recollection of Senators here bear me out, so far as I am concerned, and show the verity of my statement, and let that which goes out through others rest upon their recollection and upon a record made up two years after date.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I wish merely to correct a slight inaccuracy of the Senator from Virginia. The difference between the original bill as it stood in 1881 and the bill as passed in 1884 and 1886 was this: that by the bill as originally introduced in 1881, the funds were to be disbursed upon the joint approval of the State authorities, and of the Federal commissioner or authorities, and without the approval of both there was to be no disbursement in the States. It was not a bill providing that the disbursement should be made by Federal authority, in any wise disregarding the authorities of the State. The bill as it passed in 1884 and 1886 is before the Senate, and it provides substantially that the disbursement be at the will of the State, subject to certain conditions and reports, as the Senate understands.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. The papers state exactly what I said or intended to say, that as long as there was a Federal hand in the distribution of the money the committee were a unit; that when the Federal hand was withdrawn and it was sent to State boards to report back to the Interior Department, then came the difference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent——

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senate bill No. 371, to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools, being the unfinished business before the Senate to-day, may be informally passed over and assigned as the unfinished business for Wednesday, the 4th day of January next. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to its being postponed and made the special order for that day, but I object to making it the unfinished business in anticipation.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator objects to its being postponed in the form in which I desire, I wish to proceed with the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Why not make it the special order for that day?

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator very well understands.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting the motion the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 22, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 21, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House letters from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting copies of the findings of fact by the court in the cases of Robert E. Hale against the United States, Edwin Dickinson against the United States, and David Singleton against the United States; which were laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GAY, from to-day until January 5.

To Mr. PARKER, from to-day until January 9, on account of sickness.

To Mr. MCCORMICK, from the adjournment of the House to-day until after the holiday recess.

REPORT FROM COMMITTEE ON RULES.

Mr. RANDALL submitted the following report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to which were referred various propositions to amend the rules of the House, has had the same under consideration, and makes the following partial report:

The committee has not had time to conclude its consideration of all the propositions referred to it, and therefore reports back to the House such measures only as it deems necessary to be disposed of in order to complete the organization of the House.

The committee recommends the adoption of the rules of the Forty-ninth Congress until the further order of the House, with the following changes:

The Committee on the Library shall consist of five members.

Rule X shall be amended by inserting, after the words "on Rivers and Harbors, to consist of fifteen members," the following words: "on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to consist of thirteen members."

Rule XI shall be amended by inserting, after clause 8, the words "to the merchant marine and fisheries: to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries."

Rule XII shall be amended by striking out the word "and," before the words "Mines and Mining," and inserting, after the said words, "and Private Land Claims."

Clause 4 of Rule XXI shall be so amended as to read as follows:

"All bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, for the establishment or change of post-routes, and all bills of a private nature, shall be delivered to the Clerk, as in the case of memorials and petitions, for reference to appropriate committees."

That clause 1 of Rule XXII be so amended as to read as follows:

"1. Members having petitions or memorials or bills of a private nature to present may deliver them to the Clerk, indorsing their names and the reference or disposition to be made thereof; and said petitions and memorials and bills of a private nature, except such as in the judgment of the Speaker are of an obscene or insulting character, shall be entered on the Journal, with the names of the members presenting them, and the Clerk shall furnish a transcript of such entry to the Official Reporters of Debates for publication in the RECORD."

That clause 2 of Rule XXII be so amended as to read as follows:

"2. Any petition or memorial or private bill excluded under this rule shall be returned to the member from whom it was received; and petitions and private bills which have been inappropriately referred may, by direction of the committee having possession of the same, be properly referred in the manner originally presented; and an erroneous reference of a petition or private bill under this clause shall not confer jurisdiction upon the committee to consider or report the same."

That Rule XLVI be amended so as to read as follows:

"There shall be printed 500 copies of each bill of a public nature, of which 25 shall be deposited in the office of the Clerk of the House, and the remainder shall be deposited in the document-room of the House for the use of members; and there shall be printed 100 copies of each private bill, which shall be deposited in the document-room of the House for the use of members. Motions to print additional numbers of any bill, report, resolution, or other public document shall be referred to the Committee on Printing, and the report of the committee thereon shall be accompanied by an estimate of the probable cost thereof."

That there shall be a Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, to be appointed by the Speaker, to consist of thirteen members, to which shall be referred all propositions touching civil service of the United States.

That there shall be a Select Committee on the Election of President and Vice-President and Representatives in Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker, to consist of thirteen members, to which shall be referred all propositions touching the election and tenure of the office of the President and Vice-President and Representatives in Congress, the count of the electoral vote, and the succession to the office of President.

That there shall be a Select Committee on the Eleventh Census, to be appointed by the Speaker, to consist of thirteen members, to which shall be referred all proposed legislation concerning the eleventh census of the United States and the apportionment of representation in the House of Representatives.

That there shall be a Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, to be appointed by the Speaker, to consist of thirteen members, to which shall be referred all proposed legislation relating to claims of citizens of the United States on account of property destroyed or taken by Indians, including appropriations therefor.

That there shall be a Select Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, to be appointed by the Speaker, to consist of seven members, to which shall be referred all propositions relating to the ventilation and acoustics of the Hall of the House of Representatives.

That there shall be a Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, to be appointed by the Speaker, to consist of eleven members, to which shall be referred all propositions touching the alcoholic liquor traffic.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to hold the floor so as to enable me to call the previous question upon the adoption of the report; but I do not mean to intimate for a moment by that statement the existence of any purpose to abridge debate touching the various propositions submitted in the report of the Committee on Rules.

It will be noticed that the report is only a partial one. The time has not been sufficient for the Committee on Rules to consider every subject that has been referred to it and every change proposed; but it is the intention of the committee to investigate fully each of the suggestions that have been referred to it for its consideration. It is also proper for me to state that the report is a unanimous one, except in one particular, and that is as to the creation of the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and myself constituted the majority of the committee in that connection. There were two votes against it, which I am permitted to state came from——

Mr. BLAND. Let me interrupt the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me complete my statement.

Mr. BLAND. I want to ask the gentleman in this connection if at the proper time he will yield for an amendment to that portion of the rule to which he is just referring confining the jurisdiction of the committee to the District of Columbia, where Congress alone has jurisdiction over the subject. It has none in the States, and I desire a separate vote on that proposition, with the opportunity of amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Whenever the gentleman presents his proposition I will state my instructions. My instructions, as I understand them to be, are to ask the previous question on the adoption of the report as submitted.

But I was proceeding to state, in reference to the votes in committee on the creation of the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, that there were two gentlemen who voted in the minority, they being the Speaker and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

I desire, as briefly as possible, to state to the House the changes proposed. The first is an increase in the membership of the Committee on the Library, which grows out of the construction of the new Library building, to be erected directly east of the Capitol.

The next change is this: Under the old rules there was a Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests, the title of which is changed to the Committee on American Marine and Fisheries; and it has been made a permanent instead of a select committee. The jurisdiction has also been changed to meet the change in title; but the jurisdiction given to it does not interfere with any matters that have heretofore been considered by the Judiciary Committee, the Committee on Commerce, or the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The next change is the addition of a representative from the Delegates on the Committee on Private Land Claims. There are a number of the committees where the Territories are represented, and the Committee on Rules consider that the Private Land Claims Committee should also have such representation.

The fifth change is as to the manner of the presentation of bills and the printing of the same. The report sets forth exactly what the rule will be if the House adopts the recommendation of the committee. Private bills, it is proposed, shall be placed in the box at the desk, and public bills shall be presented, as heretofore, in open House.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman will pardon me, I would like to ask if it is proposed that private bills may be presented on any day instead of on Mondays, as has heretofore been the case.

Mr. RANDALL. I take it that in the absence of any rule to the contrary they can be presented on any day,

The committee discovered that the expense of printing these private bills for the two Houses of Congress aggregated, during the Forty-ninth Congress, $118,000, which was an increase in the cost over the Forty-eighth Congress of $22,000, showing that this largely increased expenditure did really call for some change in this particular. The committee add to that rule providing for this change of presentation of private bills, and the number of printed public and private bills, a clause, in harmony with the decisions of the House heretofore, that the improper reference of any bill should not by reason of such reference give the committee to which it was erroneously referred any jurisdiction whatever over the subject-matter. It is proposed that a committee having such a bill erroneously referred to it shall bring it back to the Clerk, and under—most likely, though the rule does not so state—under the direction of the Speaker it will be given such reference as is appropriate.

There is under the law now provision for printing 750 copies of all public and private bills; but the Public Printer, at the time of the increase of the membership under the last apportionment in this House, took occasion to increase the number, until now it aggregates 924 copies which are printed, 440 of which go to the House document-room——

Mr. ENLOE. Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania in regard to these private bills, if this provision of the rule is adopted, as reported by the committee, will these bills stand as having passed their first and second reading?

Mr. RANDALL. If the rule is changed in that respect, they will not have passed their first and second reading, but will, I presume, when they are reported back and go on the Calendar. That, in my judgment, would be the proper parliamentary procedure.

The committee further provide for the printing of 100 copies of all private bills—500 of the public and 100 of the private bills. It often happens that members desire to see, or furnish applicants with, copies of private bills, and if none were printed it would force upon them the necessity of hunting up the original bill and having a manuscript copy made, being thus subjected to expense in that direction. We thought the recommendation would be proper to print 100 of each private bill before we made too radical a change by proposing to print none.

Of the 924 bills, public and private, that are printed, 440 go to the House document-room, 308 to the office of the Clerk of the House, 8 to the Secretary of the Senate, 134 to the Senate, 15 to the Department of State, 4 to the Public Printer, and 15 are printed for purposes of the files; making, as stated, 924 copies. The committee propose 500 copies, which will lessen the expense and supply each member of the Senate and House a copy, which will be sufficient, we think, in almost all cases. There never has been good reason, so far as I know, why 308 copies should be placed in the Clerk's document-room; and our recommendation also provides that 25 shall go to the Clerk for the files and such other uses—such, for instance, as the Committee on Enrolled Bills—as the Clerk will require them for.

I have here the accurate figures as to the cost of the printing, which I shall state. The printing of bills of the Senate for the Forty-ninth Congress was $45,000; the cost of printing bills of the House was $73,000; total $118,000, being an increase of $22,000 over the cost for the same printing in the Forty-eighth Congress. As to the effect of the change proposed the Public Printer makes the following statement:

> Upon the basis of a division of the bill printing of the Forty-ninth Congress, one-half supposed to be public bills and one-half private bills, 500 copies being printed of each bill of the former and 100 of the latter, the total would be $84,300, being a saving of $33,000 under the cost by the existing rules for printing.

The committees which have been in existence in former Congresses as select committees and are continued under this report are the Select Committee on the Civil Service and the Select Committee on the Election of President and Vice-President and Representatives in Congress. Another committee is that on the Eleventh Census, and the jurisdiction is somewhat changed. It is provided that all matters shall be referred to that committee which relate to the census and the apportionment. That has always gone there heretofore, but in the jurisdiction as embraced in the rules was not included.

The next change is the creation of a new committee to consider the claims of American citizens against Indians.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me a question right there?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is it the purpose of the Committee on Rules to vest in the proposed committee jurisdiction over claims of American citizens arising out of Indian depredations?

Mr. RANDALL. I will ask the Clerk to read that portion of the report which gives jurisdiction to that committee.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think it ought to be so.

Mr. RANDALL. The Clerk will read the portion of the report giving jurisdiction to the Committee on Indian Depredations, which is a full answer to the question of the gentleman from New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

> That there shall be a Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, to be appointed by the Speaker, to consist of thirteen members; to which shall be referred all proposed legislation relating to claims of citizens of the United States on account of property destroyed or taken by Indians, including appropriations therefor.

Mr. RANDALL. That is comprehensive.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is not quite so full as I supposed it was.

Mr. RANDALL. The next committee created, or rather continued, is the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, and the last is that on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

Without yielding the floor I desire now to yield to any gentleman who may desire to speak touching the matters embraced in the report. If no gentleman desires to do so, I will ask the previous question.

Mr. McCREARY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. Is it proposed to cut off all amendments to the proposed amendments to the rules?

Mr. RANDALL. That is entirely within the disposition of the House. My object is that I may not lose the control of the floor. I think I am in harmony with the committee in the course I am taking.

Mr. McCREARY. I would like to send up and have read for information an amendment which I propose to introduce at the proper time, if I can get the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment of Rule XXI:

> "It shall be the duty of the committees having jurisdiction of the general appropriation bills, within sixty days after their appointment at the first session of Congress and within forty days after the commencement of the second regular session of Congress, to report the general appropriation bills for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses, for sundry civil expenses, for fortifications, for District of Columbia, for pensions, for deficiencies, for consular and diplomatic expenses, for the Army, for the Navy, for the expenses of the Indian Department, for the support of the Military Academy, for the Post-Office Department and mail transportation, and for the Agricultural Department; or in failure thereof the reason of such failure."

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say to the gentleman from Kentucky, and the House, that that proposition is already before the Committee on Rules and has not been reached; but I think I know the disposition of the entire committee is that there shall be no attempt to shirk a recommendation in that direction, and that that proposition will be taken up when other substantial amendments are considered by the Committee on Rules outside of the matters that we report now, which relate to the organization of the House proper.

Mr. McCREARY. At the time I offered that amendment I was under the impression that the Committee on Rules had considered that proposition. I think it is an important amendment, and I desire that there should be proper action upon it. I hope at the proper time that this House will have an opportunity of voting upon the subject of restoring a rule which was in force in the House of Representatives for forty-three years, and which was omitted from the rules only in 1880, after having been in the rules since 1837. But as I am informed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the committee have not yet considered the subject, and as I presume I will have an opportunity hereafter to present any views I may have on that subject, I shall not press this proposition until the Committee on Rules have considered it.

Mr. RANDALL. If no other gentleman desires to speak, I ask the previous question.

Mr. PERKINS. With the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I should like to say a word or two.

Mr. RANDALL. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. PERKINS. Only a few minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the gentleman take what time he wants.

Mr. PERKINS. I simply desire to call the attention of the House to the proposed Committee on Indian Depredation Claims.

As I remember, in the Forty-ninth Congress, Indian depredation claims, except those which proposed upon their face that payment should be made from annuities or other funds belonging to the Indians, went to the Committee on Claims and not to the Committee on Indian Affairs. In consequence of the great amount of labor that was involved upon the Committee on Claims, it was substantially a denial of justice to refer those cases to that committee, because the committee could not find time for their consideration, and hence they got no hearing in this House. Therefore I think it is very proper that a committee should be created for the consideration of these Indian depredation claims; but it seems to me that claims which are to be paid from funds or annuities belonging to the Indians should properly be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, as they were in the Forty-ninth Congress.

If this business is to be taken from the Committee on Indian Affairs, that committee will be left with almost nothing to do except to prepare the Indian appropriation bill—if that duty should be given to it under the rules that are to be adopted by this House. Gentlemen will remember that in the Forty-ninth Congress we passed a bill which gave to the President of the United States, under certain circumstances, the right to allot lands in severalty to the Indians; hence that subject is virtually taken out of Congress, and will no longer be a disturbing question with the Committee on Indian Affairs. Now, if all business pertaining to Indian depredation claims is to be taken from the Committee on Indian Affairs it will leave that committee, as I have already suggested, with substantially little more to do than to prepare the Indian appropriation bill. Therefore that committee will have ample time, and it seems to me that it can very properly devote itself to the consideration of such depredation claims as, by their terms, are to be paid from Indian funds. That committee has had cognizance of those claims for years past, and has given to them much investigation and consideration, and therefore I think that the Committee on Indian Affairs will be better prepared to take up such claims and dispose of them intelligently and fairly than any new committee that might be created for the special purpose. Hence, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit me, I will propose an amendment——

Mr. RANDALL. I am in no hurry.

Mr. PERKINS. Then I will offer as an amendment to the proposed rule the following:

Except such as are to be paid from funds or annuities belonging to the Indians.

That will leave with the Committee on Indian Affairs all claims which, by their terms, it is proposed shall be paid from such Indian funds or annuities.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, this rule, as I understand it, will leave with the Committee on Indian Affairs the whole Indian policy of the Government, involving a great many important questions. The rule only goes this far: It gives the House a new committee for the consideration of claims of American citizens for depredations committed by the Indians, and I will suggest to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] that the claims for depredations which it is proper or possible to pay out of Indian annuities or other Indian funds bear but a small proportion to the entire amount of Indian depredations.

Mr. PERKINS. I agree to that.

Mr. RANDALL. In other words, the great bulk of those claims are for depredations committed by Indian tribes who have no annuities or funds from which to make payment. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, it is true, as stated by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS], that under the construction given to the rules of the House in the Forty-ninth Congress such claims for Indian depredations as proposed payment directly out of the Treasury were referred to the Committee on Claims, while those bills contemplating payment out of tribal or annuity funds went to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Very many bills of this character were introduced and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs not only in the Forty-ninth but in preceding Congresses. I must say, however, that during the brief period of my service in this House, so far as I can now recall, not a single, solitary bill for the payment of an Indian depredation claim reported from that committee has ever received final consideration.

Now, the object of this amendment is the organization of a new committee which will have plenary jurisdiction of the entire subject-matter, which can consider and investigate all these claims, formulate such measures as are designed to accomplish their ultimate settlement, including appropriations therefor, and report the same for the action of the House. This proposition is in keeping with the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (Mr. Atkins), who was long an able and efficient member of the House of Representatives, and who, in connection with the duties of his present office, has given much attention to the subject. His opinion is certainly entitled to great weight and consideration. I hold in my hand his annual report to the Secretary of the Interior for the present year, and will read what he says on page 49:

Many of these depredation claims have been pending for so long a time that a large number of the claimants are dead, and can be represented only by heirs or administrators. The witnesses are scattered and many of them are also dead, and in a few more years, in the ordinary course of events, both claimants and witnesses will have passed away. It has therefore occurred to me that if it is the intention of Congress ever to pay these claims—very many of which, after investigation, I believe are just and should be paid—it should take steps at an early day looking toward their final arbitration and settlement. With that view I would suggest a plan of action which would probably prove effective in disposing of them. If it should be deemed wise and proper, the House of Representatives might, by an amendment to its rules, organize a new committee on Indian depredation claims, which committee could investigate and report upon such cases as are recommended by the Interior Department for payment, just as the Committee on War Claims examines and reports with reference to what are known as the 4th of July claims. Every one familiar with the immense pressure on Congress for time to transact the public business knows that these Indian claims can never be considered by Congress seriatim except in some such manner as above indicated.

Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that any one who is familiar with this question, and conversant with past legislation in relation thereto, as well as the delay and want of action by Congress in the just and appropriate treatment of this character of governmental obligations, can not fail to be convinced of the importance and propriety of creating this committee, and conferring upon it all the necessary jurisdiction. The first statute relating to compensation for Indian depredations was enacted May 19, 1796, providing for eventual indemnification of the injured party by the Government, and the deduction of the necessary sum out of the annual stipend from the United States to the tribe to which the Indian committing the depredation belonged. Other legislation bearing upon the subject can be found in the acts of March 30, 1802; June 30, 1834; February 28, 1859; June 25, 1860; July 15, 1870; May 29, 1872; March 3, 1885, and May 15, 1886.

I will not now attempt an analysis of these different statutes, but merely quote the same in order to furnish data for inquiry into the history of such legislation and the policy of the Government. I have endeavored to obtain an approximate estimate of the amount of money that would be required to pay off and discharge such Indian depredation claims as are now outstanding, which have been ascertained, approved, and allowed by the Interior Department, but have been unable to procure the same from any authoritative source. I have before me Executive Document No. 125, first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, in which is transmitted by the Acting Secretary of the Interior, under date March 11, 1886, a report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, containing a list of Indian depredation claims which have been filed in the Interior Department from time to time. This report was made in compliance with the act of March 3, 1885. It contains, as stated by the Commissioner, about 4,500 claims, approximating in amount about $15,000,000. Many of these claims have been disallowed and rejected, while others have been approved. It must be apparent that any proper and intelligent consideration of this vast number of claims, and the preparation and presentment of such measures, general or special, as will secure fair and correct disposition and treatment of the same, will require the constant and patient efforts of a committee created for that specific and exclusive object.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] will doubtless remember some of the circumstances under which the provision (March 3, 1885) requiring the transmittal of the list of claims contained in Executive Document No. 125, to which I have referred, was inserted in the Indian appropriation bill for 1885. In that bill, reported from the Committee on Appropriations, provision was made for the full payment of certain individual claims on account of Indian depredations. But an amendment was proposed providing in lieu thereof that 15 per cent. of all such claims as had been allowed and approved by the Interior Department, and favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs during that Congress, should be paid, and this proposition passed the House, but was defeated in the Senate, and instead thereof was inserted the following:

For the investigation of certain Indian depredation claims, $10,000; and in expending said sum the Secretary of the Interior shall cause a complete list of all claims heretofore filed in the Interior Department, and which have been approved in whole or in part, and now remain unpaid, and also all such claims as are pending but not yet examined, on behalf of citizens of the United States, on account of depredations committed, chargeable against any tribe of Indians, by reason of any treaty between such tribe and the United States, including the name and address of the claimants, the date of the alleged depredations, by what tribe committed, the date of the examination and approval, with a reference to the date and clause of the treaty creating the obligation for payment, to be made and presented to Congress at its next regular session. * * *

Since that time the practice of providing for the payment of such claims on the Indian appropriation bills has ceased, and, so far as I am advised, no measure of relief, private or public, has been passed. In the Forty-ninth Congress, May 15, 1886, provision was made for continuing the matter of the investigation and examination of these claims, as follows:

Indian depredation claims: For continuing the investigation and examination of certain Indian depredation claims, originally authorized, and in the manner therein provided for by the Indian appropriation act approved March 3, 1885, $20,000; and the examination and report shall include claims, if any, barred by statute, such fact to be stated in the report; and all claims whose examination shall be completed by January 1, 1887, shall then be reported to Congress, with the opinions and conclusions of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior upon all material facts, and all the evidence and papers pertaining thereto.

By virtue of these provisions, special agents have been sent out to examine into and take testimony concerning these claims. The objection had been urged that many of the claims were exorbitant and founded upon ex parte evidence; and $30,000 have been appropriated for making reports and obtaining additional testimony. The result is, that many claims not heretofore submitted have been presented, and claimants have been stimulated to file their claims who had not previously indulged any hope of payment, and hence the amount claimed has been increased rather than diminished.

As suggested by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, "very many of these claims are just and should be paid," and "if it is the intention of Congress ever to pay them," it is high time that something should be done in that direction.

The Committee on Indian Affairs, it seems to me, is already sufficiently burdened with other matters over which it exercises jurisdiction—the Indian appropriation bill, questions of eminent domain, the education of the Indians, and the entire policy of the Government in connection with them. It has not heretofore had the time to give to these particular claims that attention which their importance demands. I therefore appeal to my friend from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS], who I know is in sympathy with the essential purpose involved in the creation of this committee, not to insist upon any abridgment of the jurisdiction proposed to be conferred; because I believe it is due to these claimants, due to ourselves, and due to Congress that, as soon as their justice can be satisfactorily ascertained, all meritorious claims of this sort should be paid, and the committee to which they are referred ought not to be limited to the consideration of any particular class of these claims.

Mr. HERMANN. On behalf of the people of my State I desire to express my concurrence with the excellent remarks just made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]. But I desire to ask him whether, under the rule now proposed, any portion of these depredation claims will be excluded from the consideration of the committee. The gentleman is aware that under legislation adopted in 1885 the Interior Department was precluded from the consideration of any claims not presented prior to that particular time. The gentleman is further aware that since that time claims equally meritorious with any others have been presented; but the Interior Department, claiming that it has not jurisdiction, has declined to give to these claims more recently presented the same consideration allowed to claims previously brought forward. I therefore desire in behalf of my constituents to ask the gentleman whether all claims presented up to the present moment are to receive the consideration of this committee.

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] of course understands that it is impossible in the mere creation of this committee to change any existing law. The question, however, as to the propriety of the existing limitation would perhaps be addressed to the committee and to Congress; and any technical bar might, in the judgment of Congress, be obviated in favor of meritorious claims which ought to be paid. It is not the purpose of the resolution to exclude any legitimate claim from the consideration of the committee.

Mr. Speaker, these claims are of the utmost importance to people in the West. As Executive Document No. 125 shows, the claimants reside in Kansas, Colorado, Texas, Iowa, Missouri, Minnesota, Oregon, Nebraska, New Mexico, Dakota, Wyoming, and other States and Territories. These claims have arisen all over what was once the western frontier, and are in favor of the heroic pioneers who have paved the way by their suffering and privations to the splendid civilization which is now enjoyed. What I have sought to accomplish in offering the resolution, which has received the favorable consideration and unanimous approval of the Committee on Rules, is the inauguration of some measure looking to the final settlement and ultimate payment of every just and honest claim in favor of any citizen of the United States who has been despoiled of his property by the Indians.

Mr. HERMANN. I desire to inquire further whether this rule will confer upon the committee authority to report appropriations covering these claims.

Mr. LANHAM. That is included in the resolution. If there is a desire to ask me any further question I will cheerfully answer to the best of my ability; if not, I do not wish to consume any more of the time so kindly extended me by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], but will, by permission of the House, append two exhibits from the report of the adjutant-general of Texas, made in September, 1884, which, though partial and incomplete, will afford some idea of the loss and suffering endured by the people of my State in consequence of Indian depredations.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States, was received, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

The House resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES] desires to be heard for a few minutes, and I will yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Speaker, I hope the new rule reported by the Committee on Rules, as an amendment to the rules of the House, creating a special committee to consider and report upon Indian depredation claims, will be adopted. For if there be one subject upon which the Government of the United States has been derelict in the discharge of its duty it is in reference to the non-payment of claims arising out of Indian depredations. They have been allowed to accumulate, without action, as shown by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], during over twenty-five years, until they have reached the aggregate number of over five thousand. In the mean time a very few of them, perhaps some of the most unjust, have been paid.

Now, sir, I do hope, in accordance with the report of the Committee on Rules, this whole subject of Indian depredation claims may be referred to a special committee of this House for consideration and report, because it is the only way in which these claimants can obtain a hearing. The Committee on Indian Affairs of the Forty-eighth Congress reported during the last few days of the session, to be included in the appropriation bill, about half a dozen claims for payment. I was not then a member of the House, but I was here in this Hall during the expiring days of the session, and I heard conference reports between the two Houses of Congress debated.

There were a few claims reported in the appropriation bill to which the Senate members of the committee of conference would not consent, because, as they said, they had no time to give them any proper consideration. In other words, the proposition was then stated on the part of the Senate, and agreed to very generally, that although these Indian depredation claims might be absolutely just, although poor women might be starving out upon the frontier, who had their husbands murdered by the Indians and their property destroyed, although this might be the case beyond question, yet neither the House nor the Senate of the United States had theretofore provided any way whereby they could secure action in behalf of these claimants and the payment to which they are justly entitled. And as it is now they can not receive payment of their claims, for the plain reason that neither the committee of the Senate, nor the committee of the House, nor individual members of either body can obtain a proper opportunity to scrutinize them and report which are just and which are unjust and the amount due. In other words, the Government of the United States says to these claimants, "Your claims are just; some of you may be starving; we know that you need the money justly due to you, but it can not be paid because we have not furnished you with a proper tribunal to decide on your claims and make appropriation to pay them so you can obtain it within any reasonable period."

Now, Mr. Speaker, one word further on this subject, as I represent a district and constituents who are interested in very many of these Indian depredations claims. I am continually requested to present those claims before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I am receiving letters from very poor widows, whose husbands have been murdered and their property taken from them, and they are living on charity for the want of the money they are fairly entitled to from the Government.

I do hope, therefore, the House will agree to this portion of the report from the Committee on Rules, so that a special committee will be provided to consider and act upon these Indian depredation claims. When such a committee has been provided and they have taken up these claims for action, I have no doubt they will report some general bill to this House which will create a special tribunal or give jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to adjudicate upon and find the amount due. If that be done, and the Court of Claims shall consider and report to Congress upon this class of cases, I have no doubt that then, in accordance with the procedure explained by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] the other day in reference to the French spoliation claims, a report will come to this House in such a way that the consciences of members will be relieved, and they will be able to vote for an appropriation to pay these just claims.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to state to the gentleman from Colorado that I am under obligation to yield a portion of the time to other gentlemen.

Mr. SYMES. One word more and I will yield the floor; I may not have another opportunity to say publicly to the members of the House what I have already scolded so much about in private. [Laughter.] It is this: It is time the members of this House appreciated the fact that there should be provided some special tribunal to consider and dispose of these Indian depredation claims and claims of a like character.

It must be known to gentlemen of any experience in this House that it is impossible for members of committees to obtain the time to consider any large number of these claims, examine the testimony, and determine the amounts respectively due, and report the numerous private bills to the House.

But, suppose the Indian Committee could examine and report on the large number of claims and report the bill and have it put on the Private Calendar, they could never be reached for consideration or action in the House. One day in the week is devoted to the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. More private bills are usually reported to the House the first few weeks than can be passed during the session. The Committee on Indian Affairs reported a few bills for Indian depredations last Congress, but not one was ever reached for action on the Calendar during the Forty-ninth Congress. During the Forty-eighth not more than one-half dozen were acted on. These claims can never be paid if their payment depends on committee reports and action on the private bills in the House.

If I were called upon to select the three hundred and twenty-five men, who, of all others, have not the time nor opportunity to judicially consider and decide on the respective amounts due these five thousand claimants, I would name the three hundred and twenty-five members of this House. Whenever a claimant has obtained a report in favor of his bill, it is not passed, because members say they have not been able to investigate it and decide whether it is just.

Mr. Speaker, a bill creating a special tribunal should be passed, and authorized to hear and determine these claims, and find the amounts due. That tribunal should report its findings and decisions to Congress, similar to the way the Court of Claims reports its judgments, so the amounts could be put into the ordinary appropriation bills. That tribunal or court should be of such a character that the House would not hesitate to act upon its judgments and vote the appropriations to pay them.

These claims have been investigated by the Indian Bureau twice, under acts of Congress, and the amounts found due with the evidence in support of the claims reported to the House. An act was passed by the Forty-eighth Congress requiring a reinvestigation of them and additional reports by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Special agents have traveled over the country, made this reinvestigation, and again their claims have been reported to Congress. But this House does not consider these reports of the Commissioner even prima facie evidence of the amounts due, or the justness of the claims. So the expense the Government has been to, and the expense the claimants have been put to in producing the evidence avails them nothing. Mr. Speaker, this is unjust to these honest claimants. The proper way, the practical way, and the just way to dispose of these claims between the Government and these claimants is to create a special tribunal to hear and decide them. Provide that the large quantity of testimony taken in the cases shall be submitted to and considered by such tribunal.

Let us not, sir, continue to deceive these claimants any longer by holding out false hopes, when we know the just claims can not and will not be paid under the present system.

If, on account of the expiration of Congress, some of the ordinary appropriations for salaries, etc., fail, a great cry is raised about the injustice, and on the reassembling of Congress an urgency deficiency bill is brought forward and the necessary appropriations made. This is right. The Government should act like any prompt and honorable debtor. Many of these claims appeal more strongly than any other debts of the Government for payment. I know one poor widow, whose husband was shot down by the Southern Ute Indians in Southwestern Colorado about two years ago, and herself wounded, and their house and all they had burned up. She has been supported mostly by the charity of friends. Under the United States statutes her claim is due. The Government failed in its duty in allowing these barbarous Indians to leave their reservation and commit the outrage. It is again derelict in not paying this poor woman her just claim, to aid her in supporting her little orphans. There are many others I could specify.

Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the House in the name of justice and right to adopt this rule, create this special committee, and when it reports proper measures for the relief of these claimants, pass the acts and do tardy justice.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield now three minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL].

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I only desire to refer to the argument of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] against the creation of this new committee as proposed by the Committee on Rules.

It is well known, sir, that there are two classes of Indian depredation claims, one a class which is paid directly from the Treasury of the United States, while the other is paid out of the funds belonging to the Indians against which the claim is pending. Now, the reason urged by the gentleman from Kansas against the creation of the new committee is somewhat forcible, for it goes to the question of giving jurisdiction over the property of the Indians to a committee of this House.

But there is another reason, Mr. Speaker, which I think much greater than the objection of the gentleman, in favor of the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the report of the Committee on Rules for the creation of this committee. It is a well-known fact that in the Forty-eighth Congress a distinction existed between the two classes of claims, and under the rules that class of claims for depredations payable out of the United States Treasury went to the Committee on Claims, while the other class, those paid from the Indian funds, went to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

I remember well the confusion that arose in the Committee on Indian Affairs in regard to the matter. It was not infrequent that we had bills referred to our committee that belonged to the Committee on Claims. It was impossible for the Speaker, when a simple depredation claim was presented in the shape of a bill, to know exactly to which committee it belonged without careful examination. He had not time to examine the various treaties to know whether this claim should be paid out of the one fund or the other, and therefore he could not make the distinction which the rules required in its reference. That, I think, is a sufficient answer to the objection which the gentleman from Kansas makes.

Now, one word in regard to the work of the committee. I desire to say in regard to that point that the Committee on Indian Affairs did all the work possible to be done outside of the consideration of the depredation claims. I know that we worked here during the last Congress as hard as any other committee, and not a single depredation claim was passed upon by the House, one great reason being that we had so much other work to do that it was utterly impossible to investigate the mass of evidence presented with these claims and report upon them. The consequence was that very few were reported to the House.

Mr. LANHAM. Let me ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question. During the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses was any bill of this sort passed through the House upon the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. PEEL. I think not; not one that I remember.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these claims, it is well known, have been existing, many of them, for a long time. They have been standing for from one to twenty years; some of them are made under one law and some under another. Some of them are barred by the statute of limitations; others are not. If this committee is created the consideration of these claims will be its whole duty. Its whole jurisdiction being confined to the consideration of these claims, they will have much better consideration than it has been possible heretofore to give them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I rise not so much for the purpose of discussing the matter presented under any particular rule which is proposed to be amended by the report of the Committee on Rules, as to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], if I can get his attention, that it would probably facilitate the action of the House on the report of the committee to take up the various amendments proposed by the committee and consider them seriatim in the order in which they are presented by the report.

I take it for granted from the reading of the report that there will not be much objection to many of the suggestions of the committee, and probably little discussion except in reference to one or two. Therefore it will doubtless facilitate matters to take up these suggestions and consider them in their order, because, as I have said, upon some there may be discussion, while upon others there may be, and probably will be, none. Upon some there may be amendments proposed, while upon others there will probably be none.

So far as the question that has been discussed is concerned, that in reference to the consideration of these Indian depredation claims, it comes quite late in the report, and I doubt not is a proper method to get rid of the accumulated Indian claims which have grown to such numbers before that committee during former sessions of Congress. I feel sure that we should have a tribunal to consider promptly and pass upon these questions one way or the other, and settle the numerous claims against the tribes. But while that is done there is another side of the question to be considered, and that is, the claims of the Indians themselves against the Government of the United States and its citizens. They should be considered with equal promptness and settled with equal and exact justice.

I suggest, however, merely to the gentleman from Pennsylvania the propriety of taking up the amendments of the committee, and considering them in their consecutive order.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] desires to be heard. I will yield to him for a few moments.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question relating to the practical effect of adopting this resolution. As to the purpose of the Committee on Rules in presenting it, that is clear. They desire to facilitate the organization of the House.

It is known, in the first place, that it is here proposed to adopt the entire set of rules of the Forty-ninth Congress, with sundry modifications.

Now, we know that at any period in a session of Congress any member may propose amendments to any rule, but we know also that it is extremely difficult for him to get his proposition before the House, and the only occasion upon which any member can, with reasonable facility, get before the House a proposed amendment to any rule which he desires to amend is now, at the beginning of a Congress. Therefore, I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he is authorized to state, on behalf of the Committee on Rules, that notwithstanding the adoption of this resolution the members of the House will have the early opportunity, which they usually have at the beginning of a Congress, of going all over the rules of the preceding Congress, except so far as they may be modified by the report of the Committee on Rules which we have now under consideration, and of considering any proposed amendment to any of the rules?

Mr. RANDALL. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois I desire to say that the report itself sets forth that it is only a partial report of the matters that are before the committee; and I can give my own understanding, not being authorized to speak for any one else, but I think not in contravention of the judgment of the committee as regards its individual membership, that every subject which has been referred to that committee, introduced by any member of this House, in connection with the rules, will be fully considered and reported upon by the Committee on Rules, so that the House will have entire control of the matters to which the gentleman has referred, and reach a decision upon them.

Mr. ADAMS. Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania one other question. Supposing that some member of this House desires to amend a rule in regard to which no proposition has as yet been submitted or referred to the Committee on Rules, is it the understanding of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that such member will have that opportunity at an early day?

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Rules can take away from the individual member no privileges and no rights. As I understand it, any member of this House can at any time introduce for reference matters relating to the rules. These go to the Committee on Rules, and will be considered, I presume, without doubt, by the Committee on Rules and reported upon to the House.

Mr. ADAMS. Let me make another suggestion, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me. When a further report comes in, as I suppose a further report will come in, I think we ought, in fairness, considering the partial character of this report, to be permitted to go over, as briefly and rapidly as may be, the rules of the Forty-ninth Congress, and that some liberality should be shown in allowing amendments to be made to the rules of the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. The report of the committee is a mere recommendation. The House has the power to amend its own rules, and that power can not be taken away from it. I now ask the previous question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I should like to be allowed five minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has fifteen minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. I had hoped that the Committee on Rules in making this report would have gone a little further in their work and would have reduced the number of these committees instead of adding to the list. In their superior wisdom they have seen fit to include all of the old committees of the last Congress and to add one or two new ones. I will not offer any amendment looking to the reduction of the committees of this House, or ask the privilege to do so, as I know it would be unavailing; but I hope that at some time in the future we may be able to reduce the committees to that number only which will be necessary for the efficient discharge of the business of the House.

We might have adopted, perhaps, the rule adopted in another body not far from this, of creating enough committees to give the members of the majority side of the House each a committee and also the good fellows on the other side each a committee. But this body is a little too numerous for that, and we can not follow that example set to us by another body assembled not remotely from this place.

In reference to one of the new committees created here, I think it very proper to create it. I want to suggest to those gentlemen who imagine that that committee is going to bring the relief that is anticipated that they will in the end find themselves mistaken.

I hold in my hand the document to which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] has referred, coming from the Interior Department, and transmitting a list of claims now pending in the Interior Department on that subject. I find that it embraces 4,500 claims, aggregating $15,000,000. The heading of each claim is printed in this pamphlet without the substance of the claim being given, the amounts being stated in a tabular form, and the date of depredation; and this list covers 290 pages of closely-printed matter.

Mr. LANHAM. Let me state that a number of the claims mentioned there have been disallowed by the Department.

Mr. SPRINGER. All of them are transmitted here and will go before this committee, notwithstanding that they may have been disallowed by the Interior Department. There is no committee of this House that can consider 10 per cent. of the claims that will be presented during one session or one term of Congress, and there is but one solution of the problem; that is, to confer upon the Court of Claims, or upon some other tribunal, jurisdiction to hear and determine those claims. If this proposed committee will report a general law conferring such jurisdiction upon some tribunal that can devote its whole time to the subject for five or ten years, then there can be a proper adjudication of these cases, but not otherwise.

Mr. LANHAM. Will it not be within the power of the committee to recommend such a course?

Mr. SPRINGER. It will be within the power of the committee, and I hope that instead of wasting their time upon individual cases they will report a general bill which will give all of these claims a status before a proper tribunal by which they can be heard and determined.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman to yield me a few minutes more.

Mr. RANDALL. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has ten minutes remaining.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will ask the gentleman to give me three minutes more.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield to the gentleman for three minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. Such jurisdiction can be conferred upon the Court of Claims without increasing the expenses of the Government, and it will be the best means of doing justice to these claimants. Some citizens of my own State have been traveling out upon the plains and have fallen in with Indians and been the victims of their depredations. Their cases are included in this list, and I desire that they shall have a fair hearing and a fair opportunity to have their claims adjudicated in some legal way; for I think the method adopted by the Interior Department, of sending out agents to collect ex parte affidavits and then referring to clerks in the Department the adjudication of claims involving millions upon millions of dollars, is unsatisfactory and demoralizing in the extreme. I repeat, then, there is but one proper solution of the question, and that is conferring jurisdiction to hear and determine these claims upon the Courtof Claims, or upon some other tribunal. But when that jurisdiction is conferred, or that tribunal is created, there should be a clearly defined rule established as to the liability of the Government in these cases.

Is it to be understood that every man who starts across the plains or through any of the Territories of the United States is insured by the Government, as to his person and his property, against the depredations of the Indians, and that if he is overtaken and injured, or his property destroyed by them, the Government is bound to make good his losses? A great many of these cases are of that character, and the question is whether the Government is to be an insurer for every man who goes out into the Indian country and suffers from Indian depredations. I think that question ought to be settled by Congress before it is submitted to the Interior Department, to be determined by clerks employed there at $1,500 a year.

But, Mr. Speaker, these claims are but a moiety of the claims pending against the Government. I had the honor to be chairman of the Committee on Claims during the last Congress, and the claims presented there aggregated, I believe, from fifteen million to twenty million dollars. A large number of bills for payment of claims were introduced into the last Congress, but few of them could be considered. The claims for which those bills provided are still pending. As soon as the flood-gate is open by the adoption of these rules we shall have them all here again. The consequence will be that we shall be unable to deal with them, and Congress never can deal with them satisfactorily, so that the only real solution of the problem is the creation of a tribunal which can take up and investigate and adjudicate these claims.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] desires to have read, as a part of his remarks, an amendment which he intends to offer to the rules, and I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask to have read for the information of the House, an amendment which I propose to the rules. I will merely say that in my judgment this amendment, if acted upon favorably by the House, will result in a greater saving than will follow from any other one amendment proposed.

The amendment was read, as follows:

It shall not be in order for the Speaker to entertain a proposition to grant leave to print in the RECORD any speech not actually delivered on the floor of the House, and no member shall publish in the RECORD any speech or remarks not actually delivered in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I now yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] for one minute.

Mr. PERKINS. Give me a little more time than that.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has six minutes left.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I will yield four minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I hope gentlemen understand that I do not antagonize the proposition of the Committee on Rules to create this new committee. In fact in my judgment such a committee should be created. The only question I make is as to its proper jurisdiction. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that if a committee is created with the powers proposed by this report neither it nor any other single committee of this House can pass upon all these claims. There are forty-five hundred claims reported from the Interior Department for consideration by the House. Furthermore, there will be many bills introduced providing for payment of Indian depredation claims that have not been reported from the Interior Department, and no one committee can possibly do the work that will be put upon this proposed committee. Hence I think, as I suggested in the first instance, that Indian depredation claims which by their terms require that compensation shall be made from the annuities or other funds of Indian tribes ought to be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that this particular class of claims constitutes but a very small percentage of the Indian depredation claims brought to the attention of Congress. Only a very few of the great mass of Indian depredation claims contemplate by their terms that they shall be paid from the annuities or other moneys of the Indians; and it is only claims of this kind that I desire to go to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

One word as to the compliments bestowed on the committee of the last Congress by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES]. In his enthusiasm or zeal he says that during the Forty-ninth Congress that committee did not report a single Indian depredation claim. Why, sir, if the gentleman will take the Calendar of the last Congress he will find how erroneous is that statement. Many such bills were reported from that committee; but the time of the House was so occupied that the committee never had the opportunity of bringing those bills to the attention of the House. That committee was not a privileged committee, except as to appropriation bills. Neither will this committee be a privileged committee; and hence it will in all probability meet with no better success in reaching the ear of the House than did the Committee on Indian Affairs.

As to the remarks of my friend from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], he can not say words which I will not indorse in favor of the prompt and fair consideration of these claims. Nor will he be more earnest in pressing their consideration upon the attention of the House. I know personally in my own State many individuals who are in poverty and in want, as they have been for twenty-five years, because that long ago all that they had was stolen from them by roving bands of Indians, and from that time to this they have been knocking at the doors of Congress, asking from the Government some measure of justice; and I think it time that justice should be awarded to them. I therefore indorse heartily what the gentleman from Texas has said in this regard. I am not making this proposition for the purpose of antagonizing any fair and just Indian depredation claim. On the contrary, I make this suggestion in the interest of such claims, because I believe the Committee on Indian Affairs will have time to consider fairly claims which are to be paid from the funds or annuities of the Indians; and, logically, I think such claims should go to that committee. Among the 4,500 claims reported already by the commissioners appointed by the Interior Department, many are found to be honest and meritorious, but are barred by the statute of limitations because not presented within three years from the time the depredation was committed. On this ground these officers report against them. Technically this is right, as under the law their powers are necessarily limited, and they could not report favorably claims barred by the statute of limitations.

But in Congress no such rule prevails. We are supreme in such matters, and in my judgment it would be dishonest and wrong for this great Government to take advantage of the statute of limitations, and refuse to pay the many honest and meritorious claims there are against it, because they were not presented within three years from the time the loss was sustained and the wrong committed. The Government should not punish the claimants because they have been indulgent and forbearing.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the jurisdiction proposed to be given to this committee is comprehensive enough. If there is room for any objection, the language defining the authority of the committee is possibly rather too loose.

I yield for a moment to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who desires to ask me a question.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the previous question is ordered, I wish to put an inquiry to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, representing the Committee on Rules. I observe that the committee has reported in favor of the appointment of certain special committees. I wish to ask the gentleman whether an amendment proposed by myself to constitute a Committee on Public Health has had consideration by the committee, and, if so, whether they have reached an adverse conclusion on that proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee did in part consider the proposition submitted by the gentleman, but did not reach a final conclusion upon it. For myself I will say that, as one of the members of the committee, I was inclined not to favor the constitution of the proposed Committee on Public Health, because I was in some doubt as to the jurisdiction to be given to the committee—how far its authority would extend as to matters of quarantine and other subjects relating to the public health.

I now ask the previous question on agreeing to the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to ask a parliamentary question. This proposition being to adopt, with some modifications, forty-six rules of the House of Representatives of the last Congress, is not the question divisible?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that a separate vote may be called for on any proposition contained in the report.

Mr. ADAMS. Another question: After the previous question has been ordered, would it be in order for me to move that the consideration of all rules of the Forty-ninth Congress in regard to which the Committee on Rules has not recommended a modification be postponed till the first Wednesday in January?

The SPEAKER. Those propositions to amend the rules on which the committee has made no report are not before the House.

Mr. ADAMS. But, Mr. Speaker, the report, as I understand, is that the rules of the House as they existed in the Forty-ninth Congress be adopted as the rules of the present House. If I am incorrect in that impression, I am very glad to learn it.

The SPEAKER. The report proposes to adopt the rules of the Forty-ninth Congress with certain modifications, until the further order of the House; that is the statement contained in the report. The report also states that there are other propositions pending before the committee which are hereafter to be considered and reported upon.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon agreeing to the report.

Mr. PERKINS. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] whether he consented that I should offer my amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Under my instructions from the committee I am not permitted to do so.

Mr. PERKINS. I have no disposition to antagonize the proposition to create a committee on Indian depredation claims; I merely desired an opportunity, if I could obtain it from the gentleman, to have a vote on the amendment I have suggested. If in order, I would ask a separate vote on that proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. I have the utmost desire to be courteous to the gentleman; but I have no authority to admit his amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS], as the Chair understands, asks a separate vote upon the proposition to create a committee on Indian depredation claims.

Mr. PERKINS. Only with the understanding that I may offer an amendment; if I can not do that I do not care for a separate vote.

Mr. MILLS. The previous question having been ordered, the gentleman, of course, can not offer an amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. Then I do not press the demand for a separate vote.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question being taken on agreeing to the report of the Committee on Rules, it was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. On behalf of the Committee on Rules, I desire to report the resolution which I send to the desk.

COIN VALUE OF PRECIOUS METALS.

The SPEAKER. Before the resolution of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] is read, the Chair will lay before the House a message from the President of the United States.

The following message from the President of the United States was read, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, when appointed, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State, accompanied by the report of Mr. Edward Atkinson, of Massachusetts, who was especially designated by me, under the provisions of successive acts of Congress in that behalf, to visit the financial centers in Europe, in order to ascertain the feasibility of establishing, by international arrangement, a fixity of rates between the two precious metals in free coinage of both.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, December 20, 1887.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that, under the rule just adopted as a part of the report of the Committee on Rules, gentlemen who desire to introduce private bills will place their names upon the bills, and indicate by memorandum to what committee they think the bills should be referred.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a question of order. I ask whether the resolution offered by me last Friday in reference to the introduction of bills does not now come up as unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. It will do so as soon as the proposition which has been submitted to the House by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] has been read and disposed of.

ASSIGNMENT OF ROOMS IN HOUSE WING OF CAPITOL.

The following resolution, reported by Mr. MILLS, from the Committee on Rules, was read:

Resolved, That the following changes be made in the occupation of rooms in the House wing of the Capitol:

That the room of the subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations be assigned to the Speaker, and that a door-way be made to connect the same with the members' retiring-room; that the rooms now occupied, respectively, by the Speaker and Sergeant-at-Arms be assigned to the Committee on Appropriations; that the present room of the Committee on Appropriations be assigned to the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Resolved, That the changes herein ordered shall be made under the direction and supervision of the Architect of the Capitol.

Mr. MILLS. This arrangement is proposed for the convenience of the parties named in the resolution. The proposition is that the Speaker shall occupy, instead of his present room, the small room which has been occupied by subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations; and that the Sergeant-at-Arms take the room now occupied by the Committee on Appropriations, which committee shall take the two rooms now occupied by the Speaker and the Sergeant-at-Arms. Provision is also made that a door shall be cut from the small room I have mentioned into the retiring-room for members. It is unnecessary to make any further statement. The subject has been fully considered by the Committee on Rules, and this is a unanimous report. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I now move to take up for action at this time a resolution coming over by unanimous consent, providing for the introduction and reference of bills. Without asking for a formal vote on the adoption of my resolution I will ask, by unanimous consent, that the House proceed to the call of the States for the introduction of bills for reference. I will say that the Public Printer, or all those engaged in the work at the Printing Office, tell us it will be better to allow the introduction of these bills before the holidays, so that they may be printed during the holidays, and ready for members when they return.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on Monday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal and its approval, the Speaker shall call all the States and Territories in alphabetical order for bills and resolutions for printing and reference without debate; on which call joint and concurrent resolutions and memorials of State and Territorial Legislatures may be presented and appropriately referred, and on this call only resolutions of inquiry directed to the heads of Executive Departments shall be in order for reference to appropriate committees.

Mr. SPRINGER. That resolution should be modified in accordance with the action taken a few minutes ago on the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I modify the resolution so as to provide only for the introduction of public bills, as under the amendment of the rules adopted private bills go into the petition-box.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move further to modify the resolution by striking out the words "Monday next" and inserting "now."

Mr. RICHARDSON. It should also be provided that when the call of States shall be commenced for the introduction of bills it should be continued over to-morrow, if necessary, so that members of States later on in the call may not be cut off from the opportunity of presenting the bills which they may desire to introduce and have referred to appropriate committees.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I object to the introduction of any bills at this time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Very well; then I will call up the resolution for action at this time.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I object.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is pending, and the gentleman from Illinois calls it up for action at this time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask that the resolution be modified so as to read "now" instead of "Monday next," and that it be further modified so as to merely include the presentation and reference of public bills, as private bills have already been provided for by the rule adopted this morning.

Mr. SPRINGER. It provides that it shall be in accordance with the rules of the House, and that is now one of the rules of the House, that private bills shall be sent to the petition-box, and this will therefore refer only to the introduction of public bills.

The SPEAKER. That is now the rule of the House, and the resolution provides for proceeding to the consideration of public bills only.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The resolution should be still further modified so as to provide for continuing the call of States for the introduction of bills to-morrow if the call be not concluded to-day.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Of course I am willing to agree to such a modification of the resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is, that the call shall be continued until all the States and Territories have been called for the introduction of public bills.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, these modifications of the resolution will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection, and the resolution as modified was read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I demand the previous question.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to be heard for just one moment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will yield for a question, but not for a speech.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I merely wish to say, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of those who are with us now for the first time in the House of Representatives, that the introduction of bills to-day does not expedite their consideration in the least. In other words, the committees do not take up bills in the order of their presentation. It is well enough to know that, so that members may see that nothing is gained by the introduction of bills at this time. In fact, we know it is better to wait for the introduction and reference of bills until after the committees have been appointed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I demand the previous question.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I hope it will not be sustained, because it will only lead to confusion.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes not counted.

So the previous question was not ordered.

Mr. HOUK. Is the resolution debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, I take it to be the experience of this House whenever in the past we have participated in the introduction of bills before committees were appointed and the House was regularly organized, the effect has been to lead to confusion and not to the advancement of the work of this body. I have no purpose to debate this question further than to say that it is an experiment which has not proved beneficial in the past, and I trust we will not enter upon it again.

One word further. A great many gentlemen have acted upon the supposition and understanding bills were not to be introduced until after the organization of the House by the appointment of committees. If the resolution be adopted it will work a disadvantage to those gentlemen. I am as anxious as any one to introduce bills, but I am aware of the fact that nothing will be gained by the introduction of bills now, while no measure will be prejudiced by waiting until we can proceed in an orderly manner to bring the public business before the House.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move to lay the resolution upon the table. I think the vote just taken sufficiently indicates the temper of the House on this question, and in the interest of economy of time I hope the resolution will be laid upon the table.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, before that motion is submitted, let me say that I think it evident from the expression the House has just given, that it does not desire any bills to be introduced before the holiday recess. Being willing to respect that sentiment, I ask leave to withdraw the resolution.

I find that few members have bills prepared of a public nature to be submitted to-day.

There being no objection, the resolution was withdrawn.

CHARLES W. STONE,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted by the American Bar Association, favoring the celebration of the Constitutional Centennial; which were referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America.

Mr. MITCHELL. I present senate joint resolution No. 5 of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, favoring legislation prohibiting aliens from occupying United States lands for herding and grazing purposes. Such a bill has already become a law, but let the memorial be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MITCHELL presented joint resolution No. 6 of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, favoring the adoption of a constitutional amendment providing for the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also presented house joint resolution No. 7 of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, favoring an appropriation for the survey and improvement of Tillamook Bay and bar; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a house joint memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, favoring the payment of the expenses of the volunteer forces of Oregon and Washington Territory in the Indian war of 1855–'56, as allowed by the commission consisting of General Rufus Ingalls, A. J. Smith, and Hon. L. F. Grover; also that the survivors of Indian wars be pensioned in the same manner as the survivors of the Mexican war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented senate joint memorial No. 10 of the Fourteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, favoring an appropriation of the sum of $2,500 for the construction of a wagon-way from Cape Foulweather, in Benton County, Oregon, to Coos Bay, in Coos County, Oregon, through the United States reservation known as Cape Perpetua; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented house joint memorial No. 2 of the Fourteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, favoring an appropriation of $13,845.84 to pay claimants the amounts allowed them by Philo Callender, commissioner of war claims, growing out of the Indian war in Oregon Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented senate joint resolution No. 18 of the fourteenth biennial session of the Legislative Assembly of Oregon, favoring the reimbursement of settlers on even sections of land within the grant to the Oregon Central Railroad Company, which grant has now been forfeited, for the excess paid by such settlers for their lands by reason of the price fixed in the grant; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented house joint memorial No. 3 of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, at its regular session, favoring legislation providing that the Umpqua River between Gardiner and the mouth of that river be properly buoyed; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented joint memorial No. 3 of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, praying Congress as follows:

First. That all unearned lands heretofore granted to railroad corporations, and especially to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, be declared forfeited.

Second. That especially the lands of said company coterminous with and adjacent to the proposed Columbia River branch of said road, namely, between Wallula, Wash., and Portland, Oregon, be declared forfeited without delay.

Third. That the forfeiture of said last-mentioned portion of said grant be not made conditional upon the forfeiture of other portions between Bismarck, Dak., and Wallula, Wash., but that in case Congress can not agree upon the forfeiture of all unearned lands west of Bismarck, they shall nevertheless declare forfeited said lands coterminous with and adjacent to said proposed line between Wallula, Wash., and Portland, Oregon.

Fourth. That in case speedy forfeiture of said lands is not possible, such legislation will be had as will require the location and public announcement to settlers of a definite boundary line of said grant, so that lands beyond legal and proper bounds can no longer be kept from entry and sale in consequence of the present undefined claims of said company.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MITCHELL presented senate joint memorial No. 5 of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, favoring an appropriation for the improvement of the Umpqua River, from the mouth to a point at or near the town of Elkton, in Douglas County, Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented senate joint memorial No. 1 of the Fourteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, favoring a modification of the treaty between the United States and the Chinese Empire, so as to stop and prohibit the importation or immigration of Chinese and other Asiatic laborers altogether, and to adopt such lawful means as are necessary to rid the country of those already here; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented senate joint memorial No. 2 of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, favoring the adoption of some speedy legislation declaring such lands as have not been earned by railroad companies in accordance with the conditions imposed by Congress withdrawn from such grants, and that the same be speedily thrown open for settlement by the people; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SPOONER. I present, by request, a petition on behalf of the citizens' representative committee of one hundred, of the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of a bill to create a board of education for the District of Columbia. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM presented resolutions adopted by the board of supervisors of Clay County, Illinois, urging the enactment of legislation for the relief of purchasers of swamp lands in the State of Illinois; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CALL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1076) granting a pension to the widow of John Leary; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 1077) for the relief of Mrs. Clara Morris; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1078) for the relief of Florida Kennerly, which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1079) making an appropriation for the purpose of paying Indian depredation claims which have been audited and approved by the Secretary of the Interior and reported to Congress; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment in regard to this bill.

I introduced a similar bill during the last Congress, together with another bill authorizing claimants for Indian depredations to sue the United States in the Court of Claims, and a number of bills for the private relief of parties for damages on account of Indian depredations. The Committee on Indian Affairs, I believe, reported upon none of them.

There are four thousand five hundred of these claims. The amount involved is, I think, something like fourteen or fifteen million dollars. Many of these claims are claims for depredations that occurred during the period when the law provided that upon a proper presentation of such a claim and its allowance by the Secretary of the Interior, it should be paid out of annuities owing to the Indian tribes which committed the depredation, and if there were no such annuities, then out of the Treasury of the United States. There is, therefore, a legal obligation on the part of the Government to pay many of these claims, which are over thirty years of age. All the other claims which have been reported upon and are covered by this bill, are claims which have been examined by the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of existing laws—laws which provide that claimants may present their claims to the Secretary of the Interior with their proof, and that they shall be audited. They have been notified from time to time that the Secretary of the Interior has audited and allowed their claims for certain amounts. They do not understand why when their claims are audited and allowed they are not to be paid; and I undertake to say it is a burning shame that for thirty years the Congress of the United States has declined to take action upon these claims.

I am informed that for the first time in the House of Representatives there will be a committee especially charged with the examination of Indian depredation claims, and I do hope that justice will be done to these claimants now by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, and that some report will be made. It would be better to report that the laws which now provide for the presentation of the claims should be repealed and no false hopes held out to the claimants, and they be not put to the expense of presenting their claims and proving them and employing counsel to present them with the expectation that the Government would make an appropriation for their payment, rather than to continue to delay from day to day to take action upon them. If we are not going to pay them, let Congress say so, and if we are going to pay them, let the proper committee grapple with the matter and make some disposition of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 1080) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. CHANDLER, it was Ordered, That H. S. Cummings, attorney for the estate of David Huestis, deceased, have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the claim of the said Huestis, there having been no adverse report thereon.

PACIFIC COAST NAVAL STATION.

Mr. MITCHELL. On the 12th of this month I introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 8) providing for the appointment of a commission to select a site for a naval station on the Pacific coast, which lies upon the table. I give notice that on the 4th of January, at the conclusion of the morning business, I shall ask that the joint resolution be taken up for the purpose of enabling me to submit some remarks upon it before its reference to the appropriate committee.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no further morning business——

Mr. DOLPH. I do not rise to morning business, but to make a motion as soon as that is completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order of morning business, then, is closed.

Mr. DOLPH. I now move to take up Senate joint resolution No. 2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a joint resolution the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (S. R. 2) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering Congress to legislate upon the subjects of marriage and divorce, and prohibiting bigamy and polygamy.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to inquire whether if the joint resolution is taken up it would displace the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair announces that under the rule the unfinished business every day will come up at 2 o'clock.

Mr. BLAIR. Suppose the Senate adjourns earlier than that hour, the unfinished business would not be displaced?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would not be displaced. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon, to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. DOLPH. Let the joint resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of the said Legislatures, shall be valid as a part of said Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE —.

Congress shall have power to legislate upon the subjects of marriage and divorce by general laws applicable alike to all the States and Territories, and neither bigamy nor polygamy shall exist or be permitted within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction—

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, the object of the proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution, just read, is to transfer the power now exercised by the several States to legislate upon the subjects of marriage and divorce to the Federal Government, in order to secure uniformity in all the States as to the grounds for divorce and as to the effect of a decree dissolving the marriage contract.

I do not propose at this time to discuss at any considerable length the nature of the relation of marriage. The most enlightened portions of mankind agree that, however assumed, the marital relation is something more than a mere copartnership between the parties, that it is an institution of transcendent importance to the state on account of its relations to society and to posterity. Whether we affirm or deny that marriage has been divinely ordained to secure the perpetuation of the race and the happiness and prosperity of mankind, it must be conceded that it is the natural relation between the sexes, and is necessary to the formation and preservation of the family, which is the foundation of organized society and the promoter of good order and civilization. The state, therefore, has an undoubted right, and it is its duty, to prescribe the qualifications of the parties to the marriage contract, the manner in which it must be solemnized to render it legal, the proof required for its authentication, the disabilities which render individuals incompetent to marry, the causes for which the marriage contract may be annulled or dissolved, and to provide by law in what courts the proceedings for the annulment or dissolution of the contract may be instituted, the rules of procedure and of evidence in such proceedings, the manner of authenticating the decree of the court, and the effect of a dissolution of the contract upon the personal status and property rights of the parties and their children. The true theory of marriage is that it is not only a contract between the man and the woman, but is also a contract between them and the state, by which they undertake to perform the duties growing out of the marital relation to the state, and upon this theory the contract can only be lawfully entered into or annulled with the consent of the state.

While it is not desirable that criminal and pauper classes and those afflicted with disease or deformity liable to be transmitted to their posterity should be encouraged to marry, otherwise the largest possible freedom of matrimony should be allowed by the laws, and the marriage of those competent to contract should be encouraged by the Government. The dissolution of the marriage contract is a matter which concerns the Government more than it does the parties. The state has a paramount interest in the continuance of the family, because society so greatly suffers when the family relation is disrupted, the home destroyed, and the security lost which the family affords for the support, education, and training of the offspring of the marriage for useful members of the community. Free-and-easy divorce is destructive of morality and good government, injurious alike to the best interests of society, debasing to the estimate which society places upon the marital relation, and degrading to woman. As the state is most interested in the preservation of the family relation, it follows that the laws of a state should limit the causes of divorce to such as render the continuance of this relation a greater evil than its dissolution, and, to prevent collusion, should require that the state in all cases be made a party to a proceeding for a divorce, and should make provision for suitable and sufficient service of process upon the opposite party, and, in case of default, for a defense by the state.

At present in many of the States there are fewer safeguards against collusive divorces than there are against fraudulent judgments in ordinary actions at law. But it is not my purpose to discuss the evils of easy divorce. The matter to which I especially desire to direct the attention of the Senate is the evils which grow out of the widely differing laws of the several States concerning the grounds for divorce and the force and effect of a decree dissolving the marriage contract. The grounds for divorce under the laws of the several States are as diverse as the opinions concerning the nature of the institution of marriage. In some States the laws are as lax and divorce is as free and easy as the most earnest advocates of the proposition that marriage is a simple contract between the parties, which should be dissoluble at their pleasure, could wish—incompatibility of temper alone being sufficient in the discretion of the court in some of the States to authorize a divorce; and in others the grounds range from the most trivial causes up the scale through failure to provide for the support of the wife, desertion, cruel and inhuman treatment, drunkenness, and conviction of a felony, to the scriptural ground of adultery.

Quite as great diversity exists in the laws of the States as to the previous residence required on the part of the plaintiff and the character of service required upon the defendant; and as a consequence to the States where divorce is free and easy flock the parties who wish to evade the more stringent laws of other States, and the result is an ever-increasing harvest of divorces, held to be valid in the State in which they are granted, but which would be declared fraudulent and void in the courts of other States, and remarriages in the States in which the fraudulent divorces have been obtained held to be legal there, but which would be declared bigamous and punished as a felony elsewhere. But this is far from the most serious result growing out of such a system. The personal status of two women and the property rights of the two families are affected by the divorce. The first wife is still the lawful wife, entitled to dower in the real estate of her husband, in the State in which the first marriage was entered into, and probably in every other State except the one in which the fraudulent divorce was granted. The second wife is entitled to dower under the laws of the State in which the second marriage took place, and the children by the second marriage by the laws of that State are legitimate, but elsewhere they are illegitimate and their mother not entitled to dower. There are other diverse provisions in the laws of the several States which continually create confusion and make the conflicts of jurisdiction which arise under them irreconcilable.

In some States, upon a dissolution of marriage, the guilty party is forbidden to marry again; in other States the parties are forbidden to marry for a given period. Where real property owned by the parties is situated in several States, the power of a court in granting a divorce is frequently found to be inadequate to a proper and final adjustment of the property rights of the parties. The mere suggestion of these evils—and I shall at this time attempt nothing more—will convince all that a uniformity of the grounds for divorce and of the effect of the decree dissolving the relation, should exist in all the States. This is impossible so long as marriage and divorce are the subjects of State jurisdiction. The only effectual remedy for the existing undesirable state of affairs is to transfer the power to legislate upon this subject to the Federal Government, so that throughout the States and in the Territories, and everywhere where the jurisdiction of the United States extends, there may be uniformity in the legislation concerning it.

If it be objected that the adoption of this amendment would tend to the centralization of power in the National Government, I answer that many of the powers already possessed by the Federal Government are less important than that under consideration, and that the propriety or necessity of their exercise by the General Government can not be maintained by stronger arguments than can be adduced in favor of conferring upon it the power in question. The number of subjects concerning which the power of legislation is conferred upon Congress is not as important as the character of the subjects.

The exercise of the power of legislation upon the subjects of marriage and divorce by the General Government would involve no considerable expense, no additional officers or tribunals, and if the jurisdiction to grant divorces were left with the State courts, as I think it might be, would involve no additional labor for the United States courts.

The evils complained of might be effectually remedied by the United States exercising only the power of prescribing the causes for which divorces should be granted, the rules of procedure and of evidence, and the effect of the decree.

The exercise of many of the powers already conferred on the General Government requires a vast army of employés and large expenditures; and other powers which are advocated for it, such as control of the telegraph and of the railroads, would necessitate an indefinite increase of officers, agents, and employés, and the annual expenditure of vast additional sums.

None of the cogent reasons which might be urged against the exercise by the General Government of powers involving such large expenditures and such vast patronage exist in the case of the power in question. Its transfer from the States to the United States would not disturb the equilibrium between them, but the change would be most salutary and beneficial to all the people of all the States and Territories. The Constitution was not supposed by its framers to be a perfect instrument, and provision was wisely made for its amendment as time and experience should dictate and the growth of the country and the expansion of government should require. Amendments may be proposed by Congress, but their adoption rests alone with the States, three-fourths of which must concur.

I need not enlarge upon the importance of this measure in a national point of view. The family is the foundation of human governments, the institution upon which the character, stability, and prosperity of a nation more than upon any other depend. In fact it is the foundation upon which all the other beneficent institutions are built. Let that be corrupted, and free schools, a free and enlightened press, wise legislation, and the power of armies and navies can neither repair the evil nor save the nation sooner or later from absolute and irretrievable ruin. Upon the influence of the family circle and the proper training of the children depend the destinies of the Republic.

But this proposed amendment is designed to reach another and greater evil than those of easy divorces and conflicts of State laws. For more than forty years there has flourished in the United States a religious sect which has practiced polygamy under the claim that it was sanctioned by divine revelation. Isolated at first from the more populous portions of the Union, the purposes and practices of its organization but imperfectly understood by the people of the United States, and the attention of the country for the time being engrossed in other and absorbing questions, the Mormon Church has been allowed until recently to violate the laws of the land, to defy the power of the Government with impunity, so that polygamy has grown to alarming proportions, is firmly established in the Territory of Utah, and has sent its roots into the surrounding Territories to poison the social life or other inchoate States and to threaten them with the ultimate domination of the political power in its interests. The power of Congress to legislate for the Territories is plenary, and if we could be assured that with the mutations of parties and the supposed party necessities for political action which arise from time to time, and which for the time being often control legislation, even where great moral and social questions are involved, the Territories would not be admitted into the Union until polygamy is effectually destroyed beyond the hope of resurrection under the power and influence of the Mormon Church, the existence of polygamy in the Territories would not be a reason for the adoption of such an amendment.

It is not my purpose to discuss the claim of the Mormon Church to the sanction of a direct revelation from God for the practice of polygamy. I believe, in common with the great majority of the people of the United States, that Mormonism is a gigantic, powerful, and well-organized fraudulent conspiracy being imposed upon the ignorant and superstitious; that it was "conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity." But the truth or falsity of the Mormon claim for their religion is immaterial to this discussion. However false, however harmful it is to those who embrace it, so long as its practices are not in conflict with the laws of the land, its influence must be combated, if at all, by other means than legislation by Congress. Religious freedom is guarantied, so far as the Government of the United States is concerned, by the Federal Constitution.

This freedom, however, is a freedom of religious belief and the practice of religious rites and ceremonies which do not violate the laws which have been enacted in pursuance of powers vested in the General Government. The laws deal with practices and not with beliefs. Criminal practices can not be shielded behind this provision of the Constitution. That polygamy is a crime which Congress may prohibit in the Territories is not open to question. The Supreme Court of the United States, the tribunal provided by the Constitution as the final arbiter between the States and the people of the States and Territories and the United States of questions of Federal power, has so decided, and there never was any ground for a different construction of the Constitution. Nor do I propose to discuss the general character of the Mormon people. That they have many good qualities; that they are industrious, economical, temperate, and honest, as a rule, seems to be established. That the common people are devout and thoroughly honest in their religious belief seems probable. I have heard these things urged on this floor apparently as an argument against legislation by Congress for the prevention of their unlawful practices. But all that can be alleged in their favor is no excuse for crime. Temperance, industry, and honesty can not condone for bigamy, and all their good qualities can not excuse them for hostility to the General Government and defiance of the laws of the land.

The power to legislate concerning marriage and divorce in the States has not been conferred by the Constitution upon Congress, and therefore the States have the exclusive power to legislate concerning them. As soon as a State is admitted into the Union it has exclusive control of these subjects. It may enact penal laws against bigamy and polygamy, or by statute legalize them. It may pass no law upon the subject and permit the practice of them, and however distasteful and offensive such practices may be to the people of every other State in the Union, there is no power, aside from the people of the State, which can interfere. When a State is once admitted into the Union, no matter how the admission is secured, Congress can not reconsider its action and the State must retain its power of self-government and its place in the Union. Neither do I believe it is competent for Congress to restrict the power of self-government possessed by the States by legislative enactment either in the act of admission or otherwise. I will not stop now to discuss this question. Should it be seriously proposed to admit Utah upon the ground that the proposed constitution requires the consent of Congress to an amendment of the provision against bigamy and polygamy it will be time enough to consider the question. At present there appear to be other serious and valid objections to the conferring of statehood upon Utah.

I deem it proper to say that this proposed amendment is not offered by me for the purpose of preparing the way for the admission of Utah into the Union. While polygamy is sanctioned by the Mormon Church and that church controls the Territory I shall not be willing to see the United States shorn of any of the power it now possesses over the subject of polygamy in the Territory. In view of the fact that the Federal Government was for many years successfully defied in Utah, its courts compelled to adjourn, its laws set at defiance, and its appointees driven from the Territory by the Mormon Church, and that to-day the great obstacle to the enforcement of the laws of the United States in Utah is the opposition of that church, what could be expected after her admission into the Union even if the power to legislate upon the subject of polygamy in the State were conferred upon Congress? With the Mormon Church, with its perfect political and secret organization, potential in every department of the State government, the United States courts would again be utterly powerless to enforce any law denounced by the church and held by the people to be in violation of the higher law of revelation.

Neither am I in favor of the admission of Utah as a State of the Union with the constitution presented to Congress for its acceptance. And I will not favor her admission until there is more satisfactory evidence than exists to-day that the Mormon Church has abandoned plural marriages and the Mormon people have abandoned the practice of polygamy, and in good faith as law-abiding citizens are ready to aid in enforcing the laws upon that subject, nor until there is better evidence that there is a republican government in Utah and that the government of the proposed State would be republican in fact. This can never be until the political power of the Mormon Church is surrendered or overthrown and the church officials acknowledge the supremacy of the laws and yield obedience to the same. I believe that the best method of accomplishing this would be the creation of a legislative commission, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, which would be in accord with Congress and the executive department of the Government, and would enact such Territorial laws as would secure present obedience to the laws of the United States and eventual emancipation of the people from the political dominion of the Mormon Church. If the United States, with plenary power to legislate upon the subject for that Territory, with its own courts and officers, and with the machinery for selecting jurors, was unable, on account of the power and hostility of the Mormon hierarchy, for over thirty years, to suppress polygamy, and in spite of the laws and the courts it increased until there were 12,000 persons out of a total adult Mormon population of 50,000 in the Territory who were living in the practice of it, and if, even now, under the operation of the Edmunds act, it is but partially suppressed, what could be expected if Utah should be admitted as a State? Even if it be admitted that the proposed constitution could not be amended without the consent of Congress, no one at all familiar with the past history of the Mormon Church would expect to see a single Mormon punished for the crime of polygamy or unlawful cohabitation so long as the Mormon Church was dominant in the State. After the admission of Utah as a State, with the constitution which the Mormon Church has tendered, the doctrine of plural marriages might be preached and polygamy might be practiced in Utah, and Congress would be as powerless to prevent it as if it were in England or France. The constitution itself is no evidence that the people of Utah are willing to abandon polygamy. It only indicates that they prefer the provision of the proposed State constitution, with its enforcement left to themselves, to the law of Congress prohibiting polygamy and unlawful cohabitation and making the offense a felony, with the power of the United States to enforce the law through its own courts by its own officers.

Nor does the manner in which the proposed constitution was prepared and adopted commend itself to me. The constitutional convention was not called in pursuance of any law authorizing it or prescribing the time of holding it, the number or qualification of delegates, or the manner of choosing them. The call was made by the chairman and secretary of the People's party (Mormon), without previous authority from any party convention or political organization. It appeared the 16th of June, 1887, and called upon the people to assemble on the 25th of the same month in mass convention for the purpose of appointing delegates to a convention, to be held on the 30th of the same month, to provide a constitution; and, according to the report of the minority of the Utah commissioners, remained in session "over a week" and framed and submitted a constitution to be voted upon August 1, 1887. This was the most remarkable feat of the kind of which I have any knowledge, unless it be the adoption of the proposed constitution of the State of Deseret. Not only was this convention called without authority, and the delegates chosen in a manner which precluded the possibility of obtaining a fair expression of the will of the majority of the people of the Territory, but the period which elapsed between the date of the call and the time fixed for choosing delegates, the period between the time for choosing delegates and the time for holding the convention, the duration of the convention, and the period between the time of the adoption of the proposed constitution by the convention and the day fixed for its submission to the people were all so short as to preclude the idea of proper consideration either of the proposition to hold a convention, of the choice of delegates, or of the provisions of the proposed constitution.

The non-Mormon population acted wisely in standing aloof from the movement, which seems to have been suddenly conceived by the Mormon leaders and executed by the Mormon organization with no regard to the forms usually observed in such cases in representative governments. It has been contended by some that a Territory ought not to be admitted to the Union until a constitution had been adopted in accordance with an enabling act of Congress, but there are precedents for the admission of a Territory with a constitution which has been duly adopted in pursuance of an act of the Territory authorizing a convention for the purpose of framing a constitution and submitting it to the people. But there ought to be no precedent made for the admission of an organized Territory without a constitution regularly and duly adopted in pursuance of a law authorizing the convention and providing the manner of electing delegates.

But there is a still stronger reason why I am not in favor of the admission of Utah. While the Mormon Church continued dominant in the new State the State government would not be republican in form. The non-Mormons of the Territory would be deprived of the benefit of the plenary power of the Federal Government to legislate for their protection and to enforce the laws, and would be placed entirely within the power of the Mormon hierarchy. The Mormon Church is an organized government, anti-republican in form and substance. For forty years it has dominated over the political affairs of Utah, and its history is a record of uncompromising disloyalty to the Government of the United States. Time will permit only a hasty and general reference to some of the facts which support this assertion.

From their first settlement in Kirtland, Ohio, the Mormons were driven on account of their political actions, and not on account of their religious beliefs. Smith fled to Missouri in 1838, where a considerable number of Mormons had collected. In his message of 1840 the governor of Missouri tells the story of their political course in that State. He says:

> These people had violated the laws of the land by open and avowed resistance to them; they had undertaken, without the aid of the civil authority, to redress their real or fancied grievances; they had instituted among themselves a government of their own, independent of and in opposition to the government of the State; they had, at an inclement season of the year, driven the inhabitants of an entire county from their homes, ravaged their crops, and destroyed their dwellings. Under these circumstances it became the imperious duty of the executive to interfere and exercise the powers with which he was invested to protect the lives and property of our citizens, to restore order and tranquillity to the country, and maintain the supremacy of the laws.

Driven from Missouri, they settled in Illinois, from which, on account of their gross immoralities, their unscrupulous interference with political affairs, their claim of supremacy for the Mormon hierarchy, and defiance of the State laws, they were driven as they had been from Missouri. Filled with the dream of empire, taught by experience that Mormonism could not flourish surrounded by a moral and Christian community and by the side of republican institutions, Brigham Young sought, after the death of Joe Smith, to transplant the Mormon hierarchy to foreign soil, and in the wilderness, remote from civilization, and apparently free from interruption, to lay the foundation of an independent government.

But by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo the territory which they had settled was transferred to the United States and the Mormon settlement was again liable to be brought into contact with republican institutions and in subjection to the laws of the United States, which would interfere with the despotic power of Young to govern the Mormon people under the claim of divine guidance by direct revelation. The scheme for relief from this threatened danger was the same which has been adopted in the present emergency, that of statehood. Without the formality of an election, a legislature was assembled by Young, a constitution was adopted for the proposed State of Deseret, which was to embrace a territory about 700 miles from north to south and about the same distance from east to west. State officers were elected and a memorial praying for the admission of the State sent to Congress. The officers of the proposed State were the officers of the Mormon Church, the government was the government of the Mormon hierarchy. Congress, instead of admitting Deseret as a State, on the 9th of September, 1850, organized the Territory of Utah, with a much smaller territory; but both before and after the organization of the Territory the legislature of Deseret proceeded to legislate not only in all respects as if the State had already been admitted to the Union, but as if it owned the soil. It granted the water of the streams to Brigham Young and his associates; it partitioned out the timber upon the public lands among the Mormon favorites; it provided officers for the survey of the public domain, and passed laws providing for the recording of conveyances. Brigham Young was appointed governor of the new Territory, but the Territorial government during his term of office was nothing more or less than a church organization. As the State of Deseret it coined money, and in many respects acted as an independent government.

The purpose of the Mormon Church to place the Territorial government under the dominion of the Mormon hierarchy was then, as it is still, manifest. Pretending to the gift of healing by the laying on of hands, they endeavored to prevent the practice of the medical profession in the Territory. In order that justice might be administered by Mormon Church officials through the medium of revelation, they virtually abolished the legal profession by a series of hostile enactments. A cardinal doctrine of the church was that the kingdom of God on earth, by which was meant the Mormon hierarchy, was the only legitimate government on earth, and that the government must be administered and justice dispensed by revelation through the priesthood. Accordingly the Territorial officers appointed by the President were not permitted to perform their functions, the judges were forced to return from the Territory, and they reported that they found "the Mormon Church overshadowing and controlling the opinions, the actions, the property, and even the lives of the members, usurping and executing the functions of legislation and the judicial business of the Territory," etc. The secretary of the Territory first appointed was obliged to flee from the Territory with the United States funds to prevent them from being seized by Brigham Young. All attempts to establish a Territorial government and to maintain the authority of the United States in Utah having failed on account of the hostility of the Mormon hierarchy, Brigham Young was removed and Colonel Steptoe, of the United States Army, appointed governor. He arrived in the Territory in May, 1854, with a battalion of soldiers, but found such a state of affairs that he deemed it prudent to resign and removed with his troops to California. The Sunday after his departure Brigham Young preached a sermon in the Tabernacle, in which he said, "I am and will be governor, and no power can hinder it until the Lord Almighty says, 'Brigham Young, you need not be governor any longer.'"

In February, 1856, a mob, instigated by sermons from the Mormon preachers, at the point of the bowie-knife, compelled the recently appointed United States district judge (Drummond) to adjourn his court sine die, and soon after all the United States officers, except the Indian agent, were forced to leave the Territory. President Buchanan, impelled by these riotous proceedings, determined to supersede Brigham Young as governor, to protect the Federal officers in Utah, and to compel obedience to the laws. Alfred Cummings was appointed governor, Judge Eckels, of Indiana, chief-justice, and Col. Sidney Johnston, with a force of 2,500 men, sent to protect them. Brigham Young issued a proclamation as governor of Utah, denouncing the army as a mob, forbidding it to enter Utah, and calling upon the people of the Territory to rise and repel its advance.

The army reached Utah in September, and on October 5 and 6 the Mormons attacked and destroyed several of the supply trains and captured 800 oxen. Without supplies, overtaken by winter snows and opposed by the hostile Mormons, Colonel Johnston was compelled to return, and camped for the winter on Black Fork, near Fort Bridger. In the spring of 1858 President Buchanan sent a special messenger, Mr. Thomas L. Kane, by way of California, to Utah, with letters to Brigham Young, and toward the end of May two commissioners, Governor Powell, of Kentucky, and Major McCulloch, of Texas, arrived at Salt Lake City with a proclamation offering pardon to the Mormons, which was accepted and the troops allowed to enter Salt Lake City, with the understanding that they should be immediately withdrawn.

The foregoing is but a hasty and imperfect sketch of the history of the disloyalty of the Mormon Church to the Government of the United States up to the time when the Territory was occupied by United States troops. The history, as I have said, is one of uncompromising, invariable hostility to the Government of the United States, and such has been the attitude of the Mormon organization from that day to the present. I will not detain the Senate in recounting the evidence, which is abundant on every hand, to establish this assertion beyond controversy. It is found in messages of Presidents of the United States, in reports of Secretaries of War and of the Interior, of governors, judges, district attorneys, and other officers of the Territory, and of the Utah Commission, all showing that, as stated by the majority of the Utah Commission in their last annual report, "standing face to face with the law, the leaders and their obedient followers have made no concessions to its supremacy, and the issue is squarely maintained between assumed revelations and the laws of the land," and pointing irresistibly to the conclusion reached by them, that "no harmony in the Union could be maintained with the State ruled by a creed which claims all governments but its own to be illegal, and claims a 'separate political destiny and ultimate temporal dominion by divine right.'"

It can not be that the people of Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, and Idaho in their dealings with the Mormons have acted without cause and in a spirit of wanton persecution against a harmless and law-abiding people. If there were not abundant evidence to the contrary, I should be slow to believe that so many communities, in succession, of people who have been so thoroughly imbued with the spirit of toleration and fairness as the American people, have been guilty of persecution. We may do well to consider the estimate placed upon the Mormon organization by those who know it best, and who unite in pronouncing it a gross usurpation. To permit the Mormon Church now, still adhering to the doctrine of plural marriages, still claiming for it the authority of divine revelation, still arrayed against the enforcement of the statutes of the United States for the suppression of polygamy, but feeling the force of the laws as administered by honest and capable officers—to permit the Mormon Church now, in its extremity, when polygamy appears to be doomed to suppression in the near future, to escape from the power and authority of the Federal Government by becoming a State under a constitution which provides an inadequate penalty for the punishment of the crime of polygamy, and which would never be enforced by the State while under the domination of the Mormon Church, would be for Congress to basely abandon the whole contest and to permit this foul blot upon the civilization of the age to grow and spread unchecked.

So transparent are the purposes of the Mormon Church and the Mormon people in regard to polygamy, not only as indicated by the entire history of the church, but by the provision on the subject in the proposed constitution; so hopeless, in view of the attitude of Congress towards the practices of the Mormon Church, appears to be the move for statehood that it is difficult to conceive of the object of its promoters except upon the theory charged in the public press of the country, that the application of Utah and the refusal of Congress to admit her is to be made the excuse for the refusal to admit the Territories of Dakota and Washington. It is to be hoped that no attempt will be made to prevent the deliberate consideration by Congress of the question of the admission of each of the Territories mentioned, and that it will not be sought to purchase the admission of Dakota and Washington by surrendering Utah to the domination of the Mormon Church, or to keep them in the condition of Territories because Congress is not willing to secure their admission at such a price. I have too much confidence in the good sense of the people of Dakota and Washington to believe that they would desire admission at such a sacrifice, and in that of the American people to believe such an excuse would be of any value.

Mr. President, as confirming what I have said as to the attitude of the Mormon hierarchy towards the laws of the United States and the effect of the admission of Utah as a State, I will submit as part of my remarks a portion of the last report of the Utah Commission, which I have indicated by the marks on the copy I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have it read?

Mr. DOLPH. No, sir; it can appear in the RECORD.

The extract from the report of the Utah Commission to the Secretary of the Interior, for the year 1887, is as follows:

THE MOVE FOR STATEHOOD.

The present year has been marked by proceedings to form a constitution on which to demand admission to the Union of States; the fourth attempt for that purpose in the history of the Territory.

Before the election, on June 16, 1887, a call appeared signed by the chairman and secretary of the People's party (Mormon), calling upon the people of Utah, irrespective of party, creed, or class, to assemble in mass conventions in their respective counties, on June 25, 1887, at 12 m., for the purpose of appointing delegates to a convention to be held at Salt Lake City on the 30th day of June, 1887, to frame a constitution preparatory to an application to Congress for admission to statehood.

The non-Mormons were distrustful of the move and unitedly declined to join the convention, or to recognize it. They gave as reasons for declining that in view of the past history of Utah it was a proper case for Congress, in accordance with the general rule, to say when the time for such a move had arrived, and by an enabling act give it authority when, how, and by whom the convention should be called, and how conducted; that they did not understand this sudden, and to them unannounced call; that the entire proceeding was carried out by the dominant party, and delegates chosen without regard to forms of election or disqualification of voters, without previous discussion and from wholly unauthorized sources; and above all, they did not think the attitude of the great majority of the people of Utah towards the laws and authority of the General Government had been such as to invite the full confidence of Congress in their fidelity to the laws and Government, and to justify that body in granting sovereign statehood.

The convention met, and, with surprising unanimity, adopted a proposed constitution, which declares bigamy and polygamy to be misdemeanors, and affixes punishment. It also provides that no further legislation shall be required to make or define these offenses; that the provision is not amendable without the consent of Congress, and proclaims the separation of church and state. The instrument is silent as to the offense of unlawful cohabitation.

The Mormons claim that having taken this action the people ought not to be longer denied a voice in the conduct of their own affairs and in the selection of officials to carry on the government; that in a Territorial condition citizens are deprived of the rights and powers which are the strength and glory of American citizenship; that as a Territory they are excluded from participation in affairs that vitally concern them; that Utah has the population, the material interests, the intelligence, the stability, and the regard for republican principles and institutions which are necessary to the establishment of a free and sovereign State; that the movement for statehood was not sectarian, partisan, or confined to any sectional interest; but that the call was broad and comprehensive and included citizens of every creed and class; that the convention adopted a constitution in good faith, which is as liberal and fair and as patriotic as that of any State; that it was the work of monogamous citizens acting in their capacity as citizens; that, until it can be shown to be otherwise, their action should be accepted in good faith, and the constitution should be judged by its plain language and terms; that the question of whether under the constitution the provisions against polygamy will be enforced by the officials of the proposed State is a question that must be left to the future, and that time alone will show that every community proposing to come into the Union as a State must be given a fair opportunity to prove whether or not they will carry out the provisions of their charter; that they have never been accused of insincerity by any one who knows what they have endured rather than make promises they did not intend to keep; that the religion of the people should not be dragged into the consideration of measures which are purely political; that in answer to the assertion that, as a State, they will continue to build up their church, they claim the Mormon people have the constitutional right to use every means not inconsistent with the laws of the land to secure converts to their religious faith, unrestrained by any constitutional or legal provision; that Congress has not the right to interpose, as a condition precedent to the admission of the proposed State, that any church shall cease preaching its doctrines or endeavoring to make proselytes; that admitting there is no grant of power under which Congress may sanction an amendment to a State constitution, should Congress refuse to act, the Constitution can not be amended in respect of the offenses named; that the proposed constitution does not presume to say that the President or Congress shall exercise the powers granted them, but leaves the matter to their discretion; that a Territory, as a matter of right, is entitled to admission into the Union of States whenever it possesses the necessary population and has a constitution in harmony with republican institutions; that acting through the only class of citizens who enjoy the privilege of the elective franchise, the monogamous Mormons, they have met the wishes of the nation by a constitution which provides for the punishment of those offenses which have excited the hostility of the nation, and having done so, they now ask to be allowed to hereafter control the affairs of the Territory, as the Constitution of the United States intended they should; that the opposition to the admission of Utah as a State comes from a class who have been the bitter and consistent enemies of the Mormon people, and who are inspired by the hope of bringing the people, while in a Territorial condition, within their power.

The above we believe to be a fair summary of the reasons which the Mormons urge in favor of statehood for Utah.

The action of the convention and the result of its labors did not tend to allay but rather to increase the apprehensions and opposition of the non-Mormons. They make many objections to the admission of Utah as a State at present, and unanimously declined to vote upon the subject or in any way recognize the move. The following is a summary of some of their objections:

That the action taken is without authority from the proper source and not entitled to any recognition, and is accompanied by many and strong evidences of evasion and bad faith in professing an abandonment of polygamy and the accompanying social evils, with the intent to acquire statehood, and without any intent to restrain and punish such offenses, but merely to intrench them behind statehood; that the historical attitude of the great body of the people towards the laws on this subject had not changed down to the eve of calling the convention, and that until then the Mormons, their press and pulpits, had not ceased to declare the laws of Congress unconstitutional and their enforcement persecution; that though the press and pulpits suddenly became silent, with indications in a few places of a muzzled silence, there was still no sign or intimation of any change of sentiment in words or acts, and the hostility to the enforcement of existing laws and Federal authority was still as active and general as before; that scarcely any Mormon in good standing would even promise to obey the laws in the future to escape punishment after conviction in court; that they were unable to understand how the great body of the people could undergo an over-night conversion on the subject of these offenses when the day before their consciences were so strong that nothing could induce them to promise obedience to the laws; that the Deseret Evening News, their leading and uncompromising organ, had, after the framing of the proposed constitution, and before the election, printed an editorial leaving the question to the voters with the most judicial fairness, but ending with the advice to be "as wise as serpents and harmless as doves;" that in view of their past history the first evidence of a bona fide intent to obey and execute laws making these offenses punishable should be a cessation of hostility to present laws and the announcement of obedience to them; that notwithstanding the great unanimity in the convention and in the subsequent vote of the people, no member of the convention or voter has, in the constitution or elsewhere, declared he considered or believed either of the offenses named is or should be a misdemeanor or punishable, but the provision in the constitution is introduced by the remarkable whereas, for the reason that somebody, perhaps some wicked persons at Washington, deem those crimes incompatible with a republican form of government, they are made misdemeanors and punishable; that it is not easy to conceive why the incompatibility should be limited to a republican form of government, or why it should not extend to every form of civilized government, unless full force is given to the dogma taught by the dominant sect, that the only true and rightful government is a theocracy in which the powers of government are derived from God and delegated to ministers, who govern by divine right; that no constitutional provision can execute itself, but requires prosecutors, jurors and judges, all of whom under statehood would be Mormons, and if a whole people can be suddenly converted one way in one night, they might be susceptible to a reconversion equally sudden, and all the prosecuting powers become hostile to the law; that the rules of evidence and the laws of marriage under statehood are proper subjects of State legislation, and while marriage without witnesses may be good, a rule of evidence that it requires one or more witnesses to the direct fact of marriage to commit polygamy would leave the constitutional provision worthless, and should the courts adopt the rule still existing in some States, that on a charge of bigamy cohabitation and the repute of marriage are insufficient to prove the marriage, no new law or rule of evidence would be needed; that it is historical there are many polygamists in Utah, and as such marriages are concealed the number is unknown, and so far as the Constitution is concerned, all these could live openly with their numerous families as soon as the Federal laws ceased, and point to their relations as the reward of those who had lived up to the privileges of their religion; that there is no grant of power in the Constitution authorizing Congress to sanction or refuse an amendment to the constitution of a sovereign State; that the people of a State can not deprive themselves of the power to amend a constitution the creation of their will, nor can they legislate to bind those that come after them; that the Mormons have hitherto justified their opposition to the Federal laws under plea of conscience in respect to religious matters, but they have apparently made their consciences a marketable commodity and statehood the exchangeable value, if they offer in good faith to suppress these offenses, unless their religious views have suddenly changed, of which there is no evidence or pretense; that the claim that this constitution emanates from and is the work of non-polygamous Mormons is no argument in its favor; that good citizenship does not involve only the question who in fact practices polygamy, but, also, who believes in it as a moral and religious right, superior to all human laws, and hence will be influenced in his conduct by such belief; that the non-polygamists have always been a large majority, but have in every way upheld the polygamists, have been equally active and bitter in their opposition to the laws, and without their aid and support the polygamists could not so long have defied the laws; that there has been no evidence of any struggle or contest between the polygamists and monogamists, but all have acted with the greatest possible harmony and vied with each other in attaining the wisdom of serpents and harmlessness of doves; that the church leaders, who control in such matters, have never manifested in any manner their intention to cease to enforce the practice of polygamy by their people, but that their silence indicates that the converse of the proposition is true, that the Mormon Church has never abandoned its purpose of ultimately becoming a controlling political power, and adopts this method of promoting it; and further, that if the non-polygamists have reached this conclusion, that the law in respect to these offenses is superior, and that it is the first duty of citizens to obey the law of Congress prescribing rules of conduct, it is an easy matter for them to announce it and give some evidence of their good faith.

In accordance with these views the non-Mormons abstained from voting on the subject at the polls, desiring not to recognize the movement in any manner whatever.

The monogamous Mormons cast 13,195 votes in favor of the constitution, 500 votes being cast against it.

The action of the Mormon people in adopting a constitution which forbids polygamy and bigamy, in view of their past history, is an anomaly which demands some explanation. In all its Territorial history, Utah, under the control of the dominant sect, which is in reality a political organization, with aims and methods which are political, has stood arrayed in opposition to laws of Congress on these subjects, and still maintains united efforts to nullify them.

To arrive at a fair conclusion of the opinions and purposes of the Mormon people with respect to polygamy, it is proper that the views and expressions of their press and pulpits should be considered.

The Deseret News, in its issue of October 6, 1880, said:

"But we claim the right under the Constitution of our country to receive just as many divine communications as the Almighty chooses to bestow, and to follow these revelations without molestation or hinderance. At the same time it is our intention to abide by the laws of our country. When we refer to the laws of the land, we wish to be understood that we make one exception; that is, the law framed and pushed through Congress for the express purpose of preventing us from obeying a revelation from God, which we have followed in faith and practiced for many years."

The claim thus made has been reiterated by the first presidency of the church from time to time. In their address of July 24, 1885, they said:

"We can not, however, at the behest of men, lay aside those great principles which God has communicated to us, nor violate those sacred and eternal covenants which we have entered into for time and eternity."

Nothing has transpired to lead us to believe that the views thus expressed by their church organ and most prominent leaders are not entertained by the Mormon people to-day.

The call for the assembling of mass meetings to appoint delegates to meet in convention and frame a constitution was evidently the result of a very sudden inspiration, so much so that the Deseret News editorially said: "It would occasion some surprise." There had been no previous discussion in the press, nor among the people, in relation to such a movement, which was conceived and carried through in the utmost haste.

Within fourteen days after the call was promulgated delegates appointed to frame the constitution had met in convention.

The election of delegates to constitutional convention by means of mass meetings does not commend itself to persons who have been accustomed to see the important duty of framing a constitution for a sovereign State approached with care and deliberation, in accord with the general will of the people, and under proper authority, with no other aim and purpose than to advance the interests of all and not of a particular class.

The provision in the constitution with reference to polygamy and bigamy is as follows:

"SEC. 12. Bigamy and polygamy being considered incompatible with 'a republican form of government,' each of them is hereby forbidden and declared a misdemeanor.

"Any person who shall violate this section shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 and imprisonment for a term of not less than six months nor more than three years, in the discretion of the court. This section shall be construed as operative without the aid of legislation, and the offenses prohibited by this section shall not be barred by any statute of limitation within three years after the commission of the offense; nor shall the power of pardon extend thereto until such pardon shall be approved by the President of the United States."

The crime of polygamy is to be a misdemeanor (in every other State it is a felony), and is punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 and by imprisonment for a term of not more than three years; whereas, under the Federal law, the fine is fixed at a sum not exceeding $500 and imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. Under the Federal law polygamists are denied the right to vote and hold office, but under this proposed constitution persons who have committed, or who shall hereafter commit, the crime of polygamy, and all such as continue to live in that crime, will be invested with the full rights of citizenship. Under the Federal law unlawful cohabitation is punished by a fine not exceeding $300 and by imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months; under the proposed State this offense, which perpetuates the evils of polygamy against society and posterity, is to go unpunished.

The Legislature of the proposed State is shorn of its power to raise the grade of the crime to that of felony, or to annex any disqualification on conviction, while it is left free to promote polygamy by providing through inheritances and by means of wills for the maintenance of polygamous households, and to deny the legal wife the right of dower or other rights, as heretofore.

The provisions for amendments to the proposed constitution only by the consent of Congress, and for pardon of convicted polygamists only by approval of the President, are incongruous and futile and need not be considered. It is sufficient to say they are open to the criticism that if a community can not be trusted to amend a constitution it can hardly be said to be fit to be trusted with the powers of a State under any form of constitution, and if it can not be trusted to deal with those who have violated its laws it should not have the control of the administration of the laws.

If Utah should be admitted into the Union as a State, the following result would follow, namely: There would be an immediate cessation of all further prosecutions for polygamy and unlawful cohabitation under laws of Congress. No prosecutions for polygamy would ever take place in the State until the ruling powers in the State chose to do what they now arraign the Government for—"persecute" for a crime which is "an essential part of their religion." This claim has been set forth in a formal way which has made it a solemn declaration of the whole Mormon population of Utah. At a general conference held at Logan, April 6, 1885, a resolution was adopted and a committee appointed to draught a protest and address to the President and people of the United States. Such address was adopted at a mass meeting, held May 2, 1885, at which Hon. John T. Caine, Delegate from the Territory, presided, and was deputed as the agent to present the same. In that document is formally proclaimed:

"As to our religious faith, it is based upon evidence which to our minds is conclusive; convictions not to be destroyed by legislative enactments or judicial decisions. Force may enslave the body, but it can not convince the mind. To yield at the demand of the legislature or judge the rights of conscience would prove us recreant to every duty we owe to God and man. Among the principles of our religion is that of immediate revelation from God; one of the doctrines so revealed is celestial or plural marriage, for which ostensibly we are stigmatized and hated. This is a vital part of our religion, the decision of courts to the contrary notwithstanding."

It is a circumstance worthy of mention that Mr. Caine, who bore so prominent a part in the adoption and promulgation of the address from which the above extract was made, was also the president of the convention which adopted the proposed State constitution.

Under the proposed constitution no disqualification would follow the commission of these crimes; the right of voting would be fully accorded to the ruling class now disfranchised. No prosecution would ever take place for continuing that crime by living in unlawful cohabitation and multiplying its fruits to the degradation of posterity. The right of dower created by Congress would be swept away; the Utah policy has ever been to deny that right to the legal wife, and make her rights depend upon the testamentary disposition of her husband. The rights of the minority population would be left to the mercy of a majority who regard them as intruders and who have always used political power in a clannish spirit. In illustration of their spirit in such matters a statement of their course in the election of officers for the Deseret University and Territorial Insane Asylum will suffice. The university was incorporated when the Territory was first organized, and although some fifteen officers, chancellor and regents, are elected biennially to manage this educational institution, which receives support from the Territorial treasury, not one representative of the minority has ever been elected. For the insane asylum, built by an appropriation from the Territorial treasury, a certain number of directors are elected biennially, but the minority have never been accorded a representative, a privilege and a right which is recognized in every other Territory or State. Further, in Salt Lake City, where the minority have a majority in two of the five organized precincts, they are denied any representation in the city councils by reason of an election law which requires all the city officers to be elected on a common ticket.

The Mormon people can not be called hypocrites. They boldly proclaim their religious belief to all the world. Until that belief shall be changed, if they be true to their creed, polygamy, with its kindred evils, will be fostered by every means in their power. The leaders of the church will probably do in the future what they have done in the past. They do not recognize the authority of the Government to call upon them for any support in its contest with polygamy, but they do recognize the divine command to encourage polygamy. The attitude, purpose, and determination of the church in this respect has been fully developed. In the case of W. W. Taylor, son of John Taylor, who died a few years ago, it was acknowledged after his death that he was a polygamist, and yet he held a responsible office under the city government of Salt Lake City up to the time of his death. Another case was that of Joseph H. Dean. He was elected and served as a member of the city council of Salt Lake. While in office it was learned that he was and had been a polygamist for over three years. The leaders of the church had full knowledge of the fact that these men were disqualified from holding office under the Federal law, yet they acquiesced in their unlawful occupancy of public offices. We have learned of similar cases in the more remote counties. The non-polygamist Mormons were also aware that the men referred to were polygamists, and their course has been in harmony with that of their leaders, as it will probably always be. During the period in which the Government has been actively engaged in prosecuting offenders they have unitedly refused to extend any aid, but have denounced the prosecutions as persecution.

For these reasons the Commission has been led to fear that the provision in the proposed constitution making polygamy a misdemeanor was not adopted nor the action taken with any purpose to suppress polygamy; that it does not indicate an abandonment by the people of Utah in the manner which is demanded by the will of the American people as expressed in their national law; that the late movement for statehood was the offspring of necessity, inspired with the hope of escaping from the toils which the firm attitude of the Government and the energetic course of the Federal officers had wound around them. Realizing that they could expect no aid or comfort from the national Administration, and actuated by a determination not to recognize the supremacy of national laws where they forbid crimes licensed by their creed, it is not surprising that the majority in Utah should resort to some expedient to get relief from their dilemma. In the light of these facts it is evident that the relief sought for is expected in statehood, and that this expedient is, in the case of Utah, inspired by more than the usual motives operating in other communities which are composed of homogeneous American population in accord with the laws and institutions of the country.

The presentation of the proposed application for statehood will demand the consideration of the question by Congress, whether the course of the dominant majority in Utah, in the use of delegated powers in a Territorial condition, has been such as to induce Congress to withdraw certain of these powers until the perpetuated evil should be corrected (which has not been done).

If Utah, as a Territory, has refused to recognize the force and validity of national laws and decisions of the Supreme Court, can it be reasonably expected as a State it will do so? Can it be reasonably expected that crimes and evils which the Government has failed to suppress with its supervision over a Territorial government will be suppressed in a State ruled by the majority which now maintains and propagates these crimes and evils as "an essential part of their religion?"

It is submitted if it would be wise to continue a Territorial government in which the National Government could continue to deal directly with those evils until they should be eradicated, even if it should be necessary, as suggested in former reports of 1884-'5, to take all political power from those who have not sufficient allegiance to recognize the validity of national laws and the decisions of courts, and that no harmony in the Union could be maintained with a State ruled by a creed which claims all governments but its own to be illegal, and claims a "separate political destiny and ultimate temporal dominion, and by divine right."

The Commission is of the opinion that Utah should not be admitted to the Union until such time as the Mormon people shall manifest by their future acts that they have abandoned polygamy in good faith, and not then until an amendment shall have been made to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the practice of polygamy.

We append to this report resolutions adopted by the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches of Utah.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition shall be made of the joint resolution?

Mr. DOLPH. Some Senators have suggested to me that they desire to be heard on the general subject. The resolution may lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say simply, that in the early part of the session I introduced a joint resolution providing for an amendment to the Constitution, having for its object the same purpose that is proposed by the joint resolution about which the Senator from Oregon has been speaking, and I may take occasion, if his joint resolution lies on the table, to make some remarks on the general subject myself after Congress again convenes. I agree with the Senator that some such amendment ought to be adopted.

ADDITIONAL LAND OFFICES IN COLORADO.

Mr. BOWEN. I desire to call up Order of Business No. 7, being Senate bill 106, which was reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 106) to establish two additional land offices in the State of Colorado.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

An amendment was reported by the Committee on Public Lands, at the end of section 3 to add:

And said land districts shall be subjected, as other land districts are, under the laws, to be changed or consolidated with any other district or districts, and the land offices may be changed to any other location by order of the President.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOWEN. There are several amendments which I have indicated on the print I have sent to the desk, which I ask may be acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendments will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 9, after the word "first," it is proposed to strike out "corrected" and insert "correction;" in line 10, after the word "first," to strike out "corrected" and insert "correction;" so as to make the section read:

That all that portion of the State of Colorado bounded and described as follows: Commencing at the northeast corner of the State of Colorado; thence west along the north boundary line of said State to a point at the intersection of said line with the west line of range fifty-nine west; thence south along said west line of said range to its intersection with the first correction line north in said State of Colorado; thence east along said first correction line north to the eastern boundary line of said State of Colorado; thence north along the eastern boundary line of said State to the place of beginning, be, and is hereby, constituted a new land district, to be called the Sterling land district, the land office for which district shall be located at Sterling, in the State of Colorado.

The amendments were agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 3, after the word "first," it is proposed to strike out the word "corrected" and insert "correction;" in line 5, before the word "line," to strike out "corrected" and insert "correction;" after the word "second," at the end of line 7, to strike out "corrected" and insert "correction;" and in line 9, after the word "second," to strike out the word "corrected" and insert "correction;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That all that portion of the State of Colorado bounded and described as follows: Beginning at the point where the first correction line north in the said State intersects the eastern boundary line thereof; thence west along said correction line north to its intersection with the seventh guide meridian west in said State; thence south along said seventh guide meridian to the point of its intersection with the second correction line south in said State; thence east along said second correction line to the point of its intersection with the eastern boundary line of said State; thence north along said eastern boundary line of said State to the place of beginning, be, and is hereby, constituted a new land district, to be called the Akron land district, the land office for which shall be located at Akron, in the State of Colorado.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABRAM C. MYERS.

Mr. PUGH. I ask leave to call up Order of Business No. 11, being Senate joint resolution No. 6.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution indicated by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. 6) for the removal of all disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States upon Abram C. Myers.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, in line 4, before the word "disabilities," to insert "political;" in line 6, after the name "Abram C. Myers," to strike out "for having previously taken an oath, as an officer of the United States in the military service thereof, as brevet lieutenant-colonel in the Army of the United States, to support the Constitution of the United States, and afterwards resigned as such officer and engaged in rebellion against the same by enlisting in the military service of the Confederate States;" in line 12, after the word "be," to insert "and the same are hereby;" in the same line, before the word "removed," to strike out the word "forever;" and after the word "removed," to strike out "the said Myers having previously filed his written request of Congress for the removal of such disability;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That all the political disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of the Constitution of the United States upon Abram C. Myers be, and the same are hereby, removed.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed (two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative).

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, the title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution for the removal of all political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States upon Abram C. Myers."

PRESENTATION OF GAVEL AND CASKET.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator withhold that for one moment?

Mr. ALLISON. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. I have just been intrusted with a very beautiful piece of workmanship, by a Mexican war veteran, which I ask to present to the Senate, with the accompanying letter from Alexander M. Kenaday, secretary of the National Association of Veterans of the Mexican War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE VEDETTE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 22, 1887.

DEAR SIR: An old veteran of the Mexican war, who served in the Third United States Artillery, now a pensioner and a citizen of Charleston, S. C., has sent to me as a Christmas offering a gavel and casket, his own handiwork, wrought in exquisite proportions out of three hundred and fifty separate pieces of wood, tastefully inlaid, the different colors blending harmoniously, and forming a most elegant and artistic specimen of workmanship, that would be considered an ornament, even on the desk of the Vice-President of the United States. The name of the old soldier is Charles Ufferhusto.

My old friend also sent me a palmetto cane, which I can utilize in my declining years and treasure as a memento of the occasion; but it occurred to me this morning that the gavel might be a timely and an acceptable present to the honorable Senate of the United States, as a slight tribute of respect to that honorable body from a humble but very grateful pensioner under the act of Congress approved January 29, 1887—one of the very few survivors residing in the Palmetto State.

If you see proper, Mr. Senator, to present it, I will feel that I have most appropriately disposed of my old comrade's gift, and make his heart leap with joy by so advising him.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALEXANDER M. KENADAY,
Secretary of the National Association of Veterans of the Mexican War.

Hon. M. C. BUTLER,
United States Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. I assume that the presiding officer would have no authority, without some instruction from the Senate, to accept this beautiful present. I therefore move that the letter, with the gavel, be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

THE CIVILIZED INDIAN TRIBES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair announces the appointment of Messrs. BUTLER, MORGAN, DAWES, CAMERON, and TELLER as the committee authorized by the Senate under the resolution submitted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], which was adopted yesterday.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting that motion the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 371) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-one minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE MOFFATT.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced the death of Hon. SETH C. MOFFATT, a Representative from the State of Michigan, and communicated the resolutions of the House thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for properly carrying out the provisions of these resolutions.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate the foregoing resolutions to the Senate.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 22, 1887.

Ordered, That Mr. CUTCHEON, Mr. FORD, Mr. BREWER, Mr. WADE, Mr. FISHER, Mr. LYMAN, and Mr. SHIVELY be the committee on the part of the House.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Michigan will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. SETH C. MOFFATT, late a Representative from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That the Senate concur in the resolution of the House of Representatives providing for the appointment of a joint committee to take order for superintending the funeral, and to escort the remains of the deceased to Traverse City, Mich., and that the members of the committee on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I give notice that at some future time I shall introduce resolutions commemorative of the merits of the deceased, which will afford an opportunity for remarks to be made upon the same. I now, out of respect to the memory of the deceased, move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting the motion the Chair will announce as the committee on the part of the Senate, Messrs. PALMER, TELLER, and JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from Michigan moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Wednesday, January 4, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 22, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DEFICIENCIES FOR 1887.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting revised estimates of deficiencies of appropriations for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY ESTIMATES FOR 1888.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of deficiencies in appropriations required to meet urgent demands of the Government for the fiscal year 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

UNPAID POST-OFFICE CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting, certain claims reported to the Forty-ninth Congress, and not appropriated for, which have been re-examined and allowed by the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION OF POSTMASTERS, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting schedules allowed by the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department for compensation of postmasters, readjusted under the act of March 3, 1883, and miscellaneous claims on account of the postal service payable from the appropriations for "deficiency in the postal revenues 1885 and prior years;" which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of a bill (S. 261) to amend the law concerning the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries; in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced the passage, without amendment, of the joint resolution (H. Res. 2) authorizing and directing the payment of the salaries of the officers and employés of Congress for the month of December, 1887; and of the concurrent resolution of the House providing for the holiday recess.

ENROLLMENT OF JOINT RESOLUTION.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk has caused to be enrolled and examined the joint resolution, No. 2, which provides for payment of a month's salary to officers of Congress. If there be no objection, the Chair will lay it before the House, and sign it.

There was no objection.

The title of the joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 2) authorizing and directing the payment of the salaries of the officers and employés of Congress for the month of December, 1887.

The joint resolution was thereupon signed by the Speaker.

PAY OF DISCHARGED HOUSE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. ADAMS. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That all officers and employés of the House who were employed on the 5th day of December, 1887, who have ceased, or shall, prior to the 1st day of January, 1888, cease to be so employed, shall be paid by the Clerk, out of the contingent fund of the House, a sum equal to one month's pay at the rate they were severally receiving on the 5th day of December, 1887.

Mr. ADAMS. That is identical with a resolution which we passed a few days ago by a large majority of the House, except that that was a joint resolution and this is a House resolution, and that appropriated money out of the Treasury, and this provides payment out of the contingent fund. It appears to be the opinion in the other branch of the Legislature that these payments, though proper, should be made by each House out of its own contingent fund; and I am informed that the discharged clerks in the other branch were paid yesterday. As the House accepted the principle by a large majority that these payments should be made, I hope there will be no objection to the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. ROGERS. I should like to hear the resolution reported again.

Mr. ADAMS. Before the Clerk again reads the resolution I will repeat that it is identically the same with the resolution passed a few days ago, except that this is a simple House resolution instead of a joint resolution, and that this provides for a payment out of the contingent fund of the House instead of a payment out of the Treasury.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My colleague, I suppose, wishes it to be understood that this is simply a substitute for the other resolution.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes, sir.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I would like to have the resolution amended so that it shall not apply to such employés as were put upon the roll since the 1st day of December.

Mr. BLAND. I think the whole thing is an abuse—thoroughly so; and I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. ADAMS. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the resolution go to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. BLAND. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] still holds the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not desire to detain the House except to say that the whole question was before the House the other day, and the resolution passed by a large majority. These employés have to come on at the beginning of a session of Congress. It is for our convenience that they should be here. Of course some of them may be discharged during the month. They can not tell until they get here whether they are to be discharged or not. It is not for their benefit solely that they come, but it is for our own benefit that they should be here promptly on the first day of the session. I think this payment should always be confined to those who are discharged during the month. But I believe it is eminently fair that such parties should receive the usual month's pay.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. We have uniformly passed this resolution, or one equivalent to it; but it seems to me that there is great force in the suggestion made by a gentleman on the other side. It may lead to a great abuse if we allow the Doorkeeper, the Clerk, or others, by our making this provision for one month's pay, to pick up some persons about the city, put them on the pay-roll, have them serve but a few days—perhaps persons living in the city of Washington or near by—and then that some such resolution as this should put in their pockets so much money for which they have rendered no consideration.

It seems to me, therefore, in order that this money may go just where it should, the resolution should be so modified as to exclude those who have been appointed since the 1st day of December. The old employés that were here during the past Congress ought to come back, and even those who have resided in the city should come to their places. As the gentleman from Illinois has remarked, they do not know they are to be discharged till the lightning strikes them. I hope the payment may be continued as to that class of employés, but that the others be excluded.

Mr. ADAMS. As I have said, the only logical foundation for a resolution of this kind is that the employés of the old House have reason to come back, and it is our interest that they should. The suggestion made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE], whom I do not now see in his seat, seems to me to be reasonable. It is the same suggestion as has just been made by the gentleman from Indiana. If he will reduce it to form, I shall have no objection to its being incorporated in my resolution.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. It can be put in form by this proviso:

Provided, This shall not be held to extend to others than those that were on the roll previous to the 1st of December.

Mr. ADAMS. Say "previous to the meeting of Congress." I accept the modification.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will modify the resolution as suggested.

Mr. HERBERT. I suppose this modification of the proposition to pay employés this extra month's salary is made for the purpose of meeting a Senate objection. A sudden spasm of economy, it appears, has seized upon the gentlemen occupying the other end of this Capitol.

Senators have voted themselves each a clerk. They insist upon paying and do pay all their employés about 25 per cent. more for the same kind of service than we pay here; yet, with all that record, I learn we have been harshly criticised at that end of the Capitol for passing this proposition, which we sent over to them in the form of a joint resolution. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] now proposes that the same resolution in substance shall be passed as a House resolution, so that the payment of these employés shall be made out of the contingent fund of the House. I shall vote against the proposition now, as I voted against it before; but it seems to me, sir, that even gentlemen who voted for it as we passed it ought to vote against it now if the purpose of the change of form be to accommodate ourselves to the desires of the Senate.

Let the Senate take upon itself the responsibility of defeating the proposition if it desires to do so, and let the country institute a comparison between the economies of the Senate and the House. This House, though it has done things that I can not approve, has never yet ventured upon such extravagances in the matter of its expenses for employés as the Senate is practicing every day.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of moving that this resolution be referred to the Committee on Accounts, I withdraw the motion to lay it on the table. There may be some justice in paying a portion of the employés covered by this resolution; there may be some merit in the resolution; that can be ascertained by the Committee on Accounts. But to pass the resolution in its present form would certainly be an abuse. I am satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that if any member of this House, in his private capacity, were called upon to pay employés in this way, he would scrutinize the bills very closely as to the justice of them and the amount of service rendered, and we are here representing our constituents and acting for them—at least we ought to represent them and act for them—as we would for ourselves in our own private business. Resolutions of this kind have grown to be an abuse in this House, and I move that this one be referred to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. ADAMS. I believe I have the floor, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] has not yielded the floor.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for three minutes.

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas for three minutes.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, that the principle involved in this resolution is erroneous there can not be the slightest question. It may be, Mr. Speaker, that there are cases in which the House might properly make an allowance for the traveling expenses of employés who have been discharged; but to say that a gentleman who lives at Alexandria or a gentleman who lives at Georgetown shall have an allowance equivalent to that made to the gentleman who lives at San Francisco, is an abuse which ought not to be tolerated for a moment. There can not be any question about that. This resolution proposes to give a month's extra pay to Tom, Dick, and Harry, upon the false assumption that it is necessary in order to reimburse them for traveling in coming here and returning home, and it proposes to give to each one a full month's pay whether he lives in Washington, or in Georgetown, or in Richmond, or in St. Louis, or in South Carolina, or in Florida, or in California. Obviously, there is no justice in that. There is no principle in it that any honest mind can recognize, and it ought to be stopped. This abuse ought to be put an end to. If we want to do what is just and right by those persons whose cases commend themselves to the consideration of the House, let us appoint a committee of five members, if you please, and let the claimants present themselves before that committee. Let it investigate the merits of their claims, and report a bill embracing all meritorious cases and excluding those which are not meritorious. I will vote for a resolution of that character; but never again while I stand on this floor will I, by any sort of persuasion, by any sort of charitable consideration, by any sort of dictation, or by any sort of precedent, be induced to vote for a resolution of this character, which is, as I have said, wholly baseless so far as principle is concerned. There ought to be some remedy for these cases adopted upon some decent principle that honest minds can recognize, and we ought not to undertake to vote out of the Treasury in this way the money of the people that is put there by taxation, and by oppressive taxation at that.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Can the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] inform us how many persons are embraced in this resolution?

Mr. ADAMS. I can not. I know nothing about it. The House passed substantially the same resolution the other day, and I was asked to present this one instead, because the other was found to be unavailable.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Do you know how much money is involved in the resolution?

Mr. ADAMS. I do not.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Can you tell us whether these parties have been on the rolls during the vacation?

Mr. ADAMS. I know that they were employés of the last House.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Have they been drawing money from the Treasury during the summer?

Mr. ADAMS. That I can not say.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If the gentleman will permit me I will answer that question by saying that several of them have been put upon the rolls within the past month.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. How many such cases are there?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not know. There are several. I believe there are also several meritorious cases.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I think it is unfortunate that we can not get information on this subject before we are called upon to vote on the resolution.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, when the resolution came up the other day I had intended to speak upon it, and to propose a remedy for the evil to which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] has alluded, and the existence of which I admit. My remedy would be the organization of each House of Representatives on the 4th day of March next following the election of its members. If that were done, the officers of the House would be elected and all these subordinates appointed at the beginning of the Congressional term, so that no one would have occasion to come here in December unless he knew that he was to be employed for the entire session. That plan has other advantages to which I do not choose now to refer. At the present time all that we can do is either to apply this rule which has been applied year after year, or else adjourn this afternoon without making any provision for the pay of those employés who go home not to return. I had supposed that the main question was considered the other day. I have no information except that such a resolution was adopted, and that for reasons which I have given the form of it should be changed.

I move the previous question.

Mr. BLAND. Is it in order to move reference of this subject?

The SPEAKER. A call for the previous question does not under the rules preclude a motion to refer. Does the gentleman make such a motion?

Mr. BLAND. I move the reference of this question to the Committee on Accounts when appointed, so that they may pass upon the subject.

The SPEAKER. Pending the demand for the previous question upon the resolution and amendment, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] moves to refer the resolution and amendment to the Committee on Accounts, when appointed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] will allow me to say that his motion, if adopted, would defeat the object for which this appropriation is sought.

Mr. BLAND. Not at all. The Committee on Accounts can report favorably on any meritorious case, and the person can be paid, no matter whether he be here or at home.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But the employé may need this money to go home with.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BLAND, there were—ayes 65, noes 66.

Mr. BLAND. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BLAND and Mr. ADAMS were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 89.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being—ayes 29, noes 91 (more than one-fifth voting in the affirmative).

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 90, nays 89, not voting 144; as follows:

YEAS—90.

PRIVATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the House to a matter of practice under the rule adopted yesterday. Quite a large number of private bills have been deposited in the petition-box at a time when the House was not in session, and when no officer was here to take charge of them and protect them. The Chair suggests, inasmuch as the introduction of bills is a legislative proceeding, it should be done while the House is in session and the officers of the House are present to take charge of them.

In addition, members have deposited private bills in the petition-box without indorsing their names upon them, and in such cases the Clerk is unable to enter them in the Journal, or furnish a transcript of them for printing in the RECORD.

Mr. RANDALL. In reference to bills which have been filed in the box when the House was not in session, I suggest where those bills are properly indorsed they should be considered as having been presented in conformity to the rule, as otherwise they may be lost.

The SPEAKER. Some such practice should be adopted, because when the House is not in session the Hall of the House is open and the petition-box is accessible to persons who pass through the Hall, and bills are liable to be lost before reaching the hands of the Clerk at all. What is the suggestion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RANDALL. That, by unanimous consent, the bills which have been already filed in the petition-box and properly indorsed be considered as having been properly presented under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has directed the Clerk to journalize those bills as having been properly filed.

Mr. RANDALL. Then as the Journal will show that, I am content.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Mr. HERMANN. I understood yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the report from the Committee on Rules was only a partial one, and I now rise for the purpose of asking whether it is in order to submit a resolution at this time, providing for an amendment of the rules?

The SPEAKER. It is for reference only.

Mr. HERMANN. Then in the interest of the entire Pacific coast I ask to submit the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Pacific States and Territories west of the Rocky Mountains embrace about one-fourth of the total area of the entire nation, not including Alaska, with a rapidly-increasing population, marvelous resources, a rich foreign and domestic commerce, many important rivers and harbors connecting the remote interior with the ocean, which, with reasonable governmental aid, must soon produce great and lasting advantages to the whole nation, encourage competition, and reduce the present excessive charges of transportation, so detrimental to the progress of that far-distant portion of our Union; and

Whereas of the fifteen members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors but one member is usually appointed to the great Pacific West, this being greatly inadequate in view of the waterway needs: Therefore,

Resolved, That Rule X of the rules of the Forty-ninth Congress be so amended as to read: "On Rivers and Harbors, to consist of seventeen members."

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules.

DEATH OF HON. SETH C. MOFFATT.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my painful duty, on behalf of the Michigan delegation, to announce to this House the death of our esteemed colleague, Hon. SETH C. MOFFATT, who died in this city this morning, at half past 7 o'clock.

In his death the delegation feels a personal bereavement. Those who had the pleasure of his acquaintance, I am sure, feel the loss of a genial and true-hearted friend. The State has lost a wise and able counselor.

This is not the time for eulogy. On some more fitting occasion we shall ask the House to join us in a further tribute to his memory. For the present I offer the resolutions I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with sincere regret the announcement of the death of Hon. SETH C. MOFFATT, late a Representative from the State of Michigan.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a select joint committee, consisting of seven members of the House and three members of the Senate, be appointed to take order for superintending the funeral and to escort the remains of the deceased to their place of burial; and the necessary expenses attending the execution of this order be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for properly carrying out the provisions of these resolutions.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate the foregoing resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Before submitting the resolutions the Chair desires to state that if the resolution be adopted the committee, with the consent of the House, will be selected after the adjournment, and the Chair will cause the names to be entered upon the Journal of its proceedings.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The following committee was appointed by the Speaker: Mr. CUTCHEON, of Michigan; Mr. BREWER, of Michigan; Mr. WADE, of Missouri; Mr. FISHER, of Michigan; Mr. FORD, of Michigan; Mr. LYMAN, of Iowa, and Mr. SHIVELY, of Indiana.

The resolutions of Mr. BURROWS were then unanimously agreed to; and accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday, January 4, 1888.

INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. BROWN submitted the following resolutions; which were read:

1. Resolved, That the practice of the Government of the United States was correct for the first three-quarters of a century of its existence, when it collected the revenues necessary to its support at the ports or other boundaries of our territory by tariff, except in cases of war or other great emergency, when internal-revenue laws, or laws imposing direct taxes, were passed, which were repealed as soon as the emergency which called them forth ceased to exist.

2. Resolved, That the present internal-revenue laws, which were enacted as war measures in time of a great emergency, which are onerous, oppressive, and undemocratic, have existed for almost a quarter of a century after the emergency has passed, and there being a very large surplus in the Treasury which it is the duty of the Government to provide against by a reduction of the revenues, it becomes the imperative duty of Congress to enact appropriate legislation for the repeal of said internal-revenue laws at the earliest day practicable.

Mr. BROWN. I ask that the resolutions be printed and lie on the table; and I give notice that on Monday next, at the close of the morning hour, I shall ask leave to submit some remarks on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will lie on the table, and be printed.

CALIFORNIA VOLUNTEER COMPANY.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate a copy of the record, if any, in his Department relating to the mustering into the service of the United States of the volunteer company enlisted in the State of California about November or December, 1849, and of which Julian or Julius Martin was captain, and when such company was mustered out of the service, if any such record exists, with the names of the persons respectively constituting such company.

SIGNAL OFFICE REPORTS.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Chief Signal Officer be directed to furnish the Senate, at his earliest convenience, the charts and tables of rainfall on the Pacific coast, and any report made thereon by any officer of his corps, and also to express his views of the importance and value thereof.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri a question before the passage of the resolution. Would it not be better to extend the report to those drought-stricken regions, say, in Northwestern Texas and other sections where the people have suffered very greatly from drought, so that we may have the official data? I should be glad to have the Senator include that in his resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think the Signal Office has probably completed any report in regard to those regions, while it has completed its reports in regard to the region named in the resolution, and has them ready. Still, I have no objection to include the points suggested by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. I should be glad to have the Senator so modify his resolution as to extend it to the reporting of such information as the Signal Office may have on the subject.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to such a modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri desire to modify the resolution?

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Missouri is preparing a modification.

Mr. COCKRELL. I now submit the resolution as modified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution as modified will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the Chief Signal Officer be directed to furnish the Senate, at his earliest convenience, the charts and tables of rainfall on the Pacific coast, and any report made thereon by any officer of his corps, and also to express his views of the importance and value thereof; and also similar data and information touching the same subject-matter in New Mexico, Texas, and Arizona, so far as obtained.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

THE PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], coming over from a former day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. SHERMAN December 19, 1887, as follows:

Resolved, That the President's annual message be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the President of the United States, in his message, tells us that we are confronted with a condition of national finances which demands our immediate attention. He says that the money collected from the people exceeds the expenses of the Government; that the surplus now in the Treasury is $55,000,000, and will be $140,000,000 by the 1st of July next. He says the situation presages financial convulsion and widespread disaster, and that, though the dangers are not palpable, imminent, and apparent, yet they exist none the less, and may be suddenly precipitated upon us.

In view of this to him alarming state of affairs, he, departing from the practice of his illustrious predecessors, drops from his annual message all reference to our foreign relations, to the many interesting questions that have arisen during the past year in our national affairs, and even omits the usual recognition of the Supreme Ruler of the Universe. All things celestial and terrestrial must be postponed until we get rid of the surplus revenue.

With this extraordinary message before us, I feel called upon to examine the extent of the dangers that the President warns us of, whether they are exaggerated or not, the causes, and the remedies proposed.

The first inquiry is whether the conditions stated are sudden and unforeseen, or have existed for a long time, and grow out of natural causes easily provided for. The existence of a surplus revenue has been a constant occurrence before and since the close of the war. Instead of being a danger, it is an indication of the continuous increase of our domestic productions, of our foreign and domestic commerce, and the steady improvement of our financial condition.

When in 1806 President Jefferson had the good fortune of a surplus revenue, he, in his message, said:

> To what other object shall the surpluses be appropriated * * * after the entire discharge of the public debt, and during those intervals when war shall not call for them? Shall we suppress the impost and thus give that advantage to foreign over domestic manufactures?

He believed the patriotism of the people would "prefer its continuance, and application for the purposes of the public education, roads, rivers, and canals."

When General Jackson had the like good fortune he recommended the distribution of the surplus among the States, and in the last year of his administration Mr. Calhoun introduced a bill for that purpose, which was passed by large majorities in both Houses and signed by President Jackson.

A larger surplus revenue has frequently from time to time been wisely dealt with by Republican administrations. It has either been applied by the executive authorities to the payment of the public debt, or its accumulation has been prevented by Congress, from time to time, by the reduction or repeal of taxes. In the administration of each of Mr. Cleveland's predecessors since the close of the war this simple remedy has been applied without neglecting other matters or raising a cry of alarm. All these reductions of taxes have been made by the Republican party. The Democratic party has had the control of the House of Representatives since the success of the Mississippi plan, except for two years, and during that time never originated or proposed a reduction of taxes. The only Republican Congress for ten years did, by the act approved by President Arthur on the 3d of March, 1883, largely reduce both internal taxes and customs duties to meet the very difficulty which so alarms the President.

Now, in the third year of his administration, he tells you that on the 1st of June, 1885, within three months after he took the oath of office, there was a surplus of $18,000,000, and that it increased at the rate of over a million a week. Why did he not then follow the example of his predecessors by using the powers conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury to apply this surplus to the reduction of the public debt? Instead of this, although outstanding bonds were redeemable at pleasure, his Administration changed the form of the debt statement, so as to conceal nearly thirty millions of money as unavailable assets, and swelled the surplus for nearly a year, until friend and foe alike cried out against it. If he regarded this growing surplus as a danger, why did he not, as soon as possible, bring his influence to bear upon Congress to provide for a reduction of taxation?

I may also ask, why did not Congress then apply the remedy? The Forty-ninth Congress lived its two years and died. Mr. Cleveland was then as now President of the United States. The House of Representatives contained a large majority of his political friends. They alone had the initiative, the origination, the constitutional power to introduce a bill to reduce taxes. Why was it not done? The only answer is that a controlling majority of that party would not allow a bill to be reported unless it contained provisions which in the opinion of the majority of the members of the House would do great injury to or destroy domestic production, create greater distress than even the accumulation of surplus, and reduce the wages of laborers now usefully employed. If it had been the desire to reduce taxes without reducing American production, the task was easy; but the enormous powers conferred upon the Speaker of the House were used to prevent even the presentation of such a bill, and in this it was understood he had the hearty sympathy and support of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury.

On the 19th day of July, 1886, I called the attention of the Senate to the precise difficulty and danger of the accruing surplus revenue, and the readiness of the majority of the Senate to provide for the reduction of taxes and application of the surplus. But for the action of the President and his Administration, including the Democratic majority in the House of Representatives, the taxes would then have been reduced without endangering domestic industries.

But, sir, even without a reduction of taxation, the surplus revenue might have been applied for great national objects, but for the vetoes of the President and the failure of the Secretary of the Treasury to exercise plain discretionary powers conferred upon him by law, and the failure of the Democratic House of Representatives to make appropriations for some of the highest national objects demanded by the people. The President, on what I regard as a frivolous reason, refused his signature to the bill providing for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which would have appropriated more than $10,000,000, or nearly one-fifth of the surplus revenue stated by him, for necessary public works and objects of the highest importance in all parts of the country. He, by his veto of the dependent pension bill, withheld from soldiers of the Union Army, many of them suffering in almshouses and charitable institutions, appropriations made by both Houses of Congress for their relief.

The House of Representatives refused to provide for a system of coast defenses, frequently recommended by the executive authorities, for a proper increase and building up of the Navy and our commercial marine, for postal communication with the South American states, and for the encouragement and support of schools for the education of illiterate children. The House neglected or refused to appropriate for deficiencies amounting to eight millions admitted to be due. The House also neglected to pass a Senate bill that proposed to refund to the several States the direct tax levied in 1862 under the stress of war. This tax, collected from the loyal States, is still charged against most of the Confederate States, causing inequalities and discontent in every State. Here there was a proper mode of applying $14,000,000 of the surplus in a way not open to objection.

Had these appropriations, sanctioned by the Senate, been made by the House of Representatives and approved by the President, and the residue of the surplus been applied to the purchase of the public debt, the condition of the Treasury, which so alarms him, would not exist, the public debt would have been greatly reduced, and improvements of vital importance to our commerce would be in course of construction.

But the President casts doubt upon the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to enter the markets and purchase bonds. He says it is "a pretense" or "a supposition." He says the pretense is founded on a provision in an appropriation bill passed several years ago, and is subject to the "suspicion" that it was temporary and limited. Here is the second section of the sundry civil bill approved March 3, 1881 (United States Statutes, volume 21, page 457):

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury may at any time apply the surplus money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as he may consider proper, to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds: Provided, That the bonds so purchased or redeemed shall constitute no part of the sinking fund, but shall be canceled.

This law was passed by a Democratic Congress in both Houses, on motion of Mr. Bayard, at my request as Secretary of the Treasury, to meet the very difficulty suggested, and, in plain English, to operate "at any time." Under it the Secretary of the Treasury could have and ought to have applied the surplus in the Treasury from time to time to the purchase or redemption of bonds of the United States from the beginning of this Administration to this hour, instead of which there was a steady accumulation of the surplus beyond any precedent, which tended to and did produce the very dangers and difficulties by which we are threatened.

I do not attribute to either of these great officers the intent to produce these results; I do not wish to call into question their integrity or fidelity; but when they try to alarm the country, so as to induce us to break down great industrial interests, I point them to the neglect of a public duty intrusted to their discretion as the fountain of their woes. I say they have this power now. If evil comes to the Republic by this surplus, it is their fault. A power neglected is often as great a wrong as a power usurped. An artificial scare can not be made to cover the faults and defects of this Administration.

Again, sir, if the dangers of this surplus revenue were so great and imminent as the President says they were during the last summer, why did he not convene Congress, the law-making power, to deal with what he calls "the precarious condition of financial affairs," "the distress in business circles," and "absolute peril at hand?" What more "extraordinary occasion" could occur for the exercise of his power to convene Congress? But he did not do it. And now that we are met in regular order we are not to be driven pell-mell by an outcry to reverse the policy of our country for nearly thirty years, to build up our domestic industries by reasonable and proper protection against foreign productions.

Sir, for one I wish to approach the questions presented by the President with a sincere respect for him and his high office, but with a consciousness that we, Senators and Members, have the responsibility of acting upon these matters, with fuller information and a broader view of the interest of our constituents than any executive officer, however elevated, can have.

I agree, as I said more than once during the last Congress, that the revenue should be reduced. It is a pleasing and grateful task, and the moment the House of Representatives gives us jurisdiction of the subject-matter the Senate will be ready to share in this duty, as it has as many as six times done since the close of the war; and if from time to time the Secretary of the Treasury will only do his part, by applying the revenue to current appropriations and the judicious purchase of the public debt, we can, I believe, repair the delays of his party and reduce taxation without crippling industry.

Sir, I agree, as stated by the President, that unnecessary and extravagant appropriations ought not to be made to avoid a surplus of revenue. No money should be collected from the people except to meet the requirements of the Government properly and economically administered. The true remedy is in the reduction of revenue; but this reduction should be made so as to give the greatest relief to the people of the United States. We are legislating not for foreign nations, but for our own; it is for American workshops and American laborers, and not for English capitalists and laborers. It is American productions, the home market, free trade, and easy exchanges between 60,000,000 of our countrymen that we should foster, encourage, and build up by our revenue laws, and not by increased importations to cheapen home labor. Cheapness is not the chief object of desire, but prosperity, employment, industry, and thrift at home.

The highest surplus revenue estimated by the President or Secretary is fifty-five millions a year, after complying with the sinking-fund law. I am glad both the President and Secretary recognize the obligation of this law, for it is not only a declaration of a wise public policy, but is an agreement made with public creditors. And even this estimate is based upon a continuance of the narrow policy of neglect of the defenses of the country, of the improvement of our rivers and harbors, of our just obligations to Union soldiers, of growing illiteracy in nearly half the States, and the increasing burdens of local taxation in all the States. Upon this basis alone we can remit to our people fifty-five millions of taxes. How shall it be done?

We have two distinct systems of taxation: one upon the American productions of spirits, tobacco, and beer, and the other upon imported goods, the products of foreign nations. The first of these the President dismisses with a single sentence. He says that none of the articles named are necessaries; that "there appears to be no just complaint of this taxation by the consumers of these articles, and there seems to be nothing so well able to bear the burden without hardships to any portion of the people."

It may be that there is no complaint by the consumers; but can he say that of the producers of these articles? They are all either the product of the farm or immediate fruits of the products of the farm. Their chief cost is in the leaf-tobacco, or the corn, rye, wheat, and barley of the farm. Do not the farmers complain of this tax? If the President thinks they do not, he is greatly mistaken. The manufacturers of tobacco and the distillers and brewers may not complain, for the necessary requirements of collection laws give them a close monopoly; but the farmers, who are compelled to sell to licensed dealers alone, do complain. The tax on whisky may, and I think does, to some extent, restrain the use of the article as a beverage, and in this way does good; but the taxes on tobacco and beer do not. The traditions and policy of our people are against internal taxes. During and since the war they were a necessity. Now, if continued, they should be reduced; especially the tax on tobacco, no longer necessary, should be remitted. Though tobacco is not, like bread and meat, a necessity, yet its use is so general that the tax is a burden to the farmer and the consumer. The special taxes on rectifiers, special dealers, stills, and worms, yielding annually $5,200,000, ought to be repealed and left to be imposed by the States, and the tax on spirits and beer might be modified so that the States could impose taxes on the domestic consumption of these articles, a bounteous source of revenue, and a proper means of relief from the burdens of local taxation. If the object sought was only to avoid the accumulation of surplus revenue, the easy, natural, and logical course is to repeal or largely reduce internal revenue; and I am glad to notice that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] has introduced a proposition to that effect.

But the President proposes to continue these taxes without diminution, so that he may strike a more effective blow at the taxes now resting upon foreign productions. It is of taxes or duties on foreign goods he uses the epithets, "vicious, inequitable, and illogical." His Secretary says: "Reduce duties upon every dutiable article to the lowest point possible." It is at the tariff laws that these two officers aim their epithets and arguments, and the surplus revenue is the mere pretext or occasion. It is the protective industrial policy built up by the Republican party that they would break down. Though the President says that the labor engaged in manufactures should be considered as well as the preservation of our manufactures, yet the message, when fairly construed, is a severe indictment of all engaged in manufactures.

The President speaks of taxes "wrung" from the people "for the benefit of our manufacturers quite beyond a reasonable demand," of "organized combinations to maintain their advantage," of taxes fastened "with relentless grasp upon the clothing" of the people, who are abused and irritated. It is a sweeping accusation against the policy of protection, supported by the great mass of his countrymen and recommended by his most illustrious predecessors. It shows that he favors a public policy which will, in the end, leave our manufacturers in every branch of industry, and the laborers employed as well, to the hard, sharp, and grinding competition of the capital and labor of the world.

Let us then examine in detail this alleged scheme of injustice and wrong, under which, it is said, we have suffered for twenty years, and the effect of the new policy proposed upon the industry and prosperity of our constituents.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, there was imported from foreign countries for consumption in the United States merchandise to the value of $683,418,981. Of this there was admitted free of duty merchandise of the value of $233,093,659, giving absolute free trade in domestic productions to the 60,000,000 of our people with each other and with all the world, and free trade in over one-third of all the articles of foreign production consumed in this country. These articles are mainly such as can not be produced here by reason of climate; they do not come into competition with domestic industry; and a tax upon them would be simply a burden without any redeeming benefit. With this kind of free trade I am in hearty sympathy, and would extend it to every article of common use, the growth or production of which is not profitable in the United States. If Senators can name any such articles not already on the free-list, they will have my hearty assistance to place them upon the free-list. It is exactly the opposite policy that is proposed by the President and the school to which he belongs. They seek to place taxes upon articles now free, such as tea and coffee, in order that a greater reduction may be made on articles that do come into competition with home industry.

After deducting the free-list, we import goods of the value of $450,000,000 upon which we levy duties. Shall this be by a uniform rate? We say no, but by a careful discrimination and classification of rates, depending upon the nature and quality of the goods, who are to be the consumers, and the effect the rates proposed will have upon domestic industry; we therefore say that articles of voluntary use, of luxury, ornament, or appetite, not in common use among the people, and which are purchased almost exclusively by the wealthy, should bear a higher rate of taxation—the highest rate that experience shows can be collected without excluding them or inducing smuggling. This is founded upon the admitted maxim of political economy, that taxes should be assessed upon those best able to pay.

This class of articles takes a wide range and includes many that compete with our domestic industries, but the foreign articles are preferred to domestic articles because of taste, fashion, or quality, or are supposed to be superior in flavor to the article of domestic growth. This is especially the case with wines, liquors, and cigars. Other articles of foreign production are supposed to be of higher grades of art, beauty, or excellence than the domestic article, such as silks, satins, broadcloths, innumerable articles of dress and ornament, and porcelain, statuary, painting, glassware, and the like. As to all these articles the price is a matter of indifference to the consumer, and the rate of duty is very much like the price fixed by the manufacturer, as much as you can get.

This is the policy of the present tariff laws, and it has operated even better than was hoped. The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics has given us a list of some of these articles in Schedule E, pages 71–73 of his last report, amounting in value to $86,531,039, which yielded a revenue of $42,172,328 during the last fiscal year. This includes diamonds and other precious stones valued at $10,981,192, upon which a duty is levied of 10 per cent., because experience has shown that a higher rate would lead to smuggling and thereby diminish the revenue. It also includes paintings and statuary valued at $1,935,306, at a duty of 30 per cent. Excluding these articles, the rate of duty on other articles of luxury ranges from 50 to 100 per cent.

But Schedule E does not embrace all the articles properly classed as luxuries. The chief of that bureau says: "In the present table many articles of luxury are grouped together in Class D." Then, again, there are numerous articles of cotton, wool, linen, of furniture, of pottery, glass, etc., which are so elaborately manufactured and ornamented as to become more articles of luxury than many articles of silk which are classed as luxuries. These articles being for the most part subject to the same rates of duty as others of plainer and less elaborate manufacture, and being classed in the import statement with them as furniture, cotton manufactures, glassware, etc., the richer and more luxurious articles can not be distinguished from the necessities, and therefore must be included under Class D.

Taking from the other schedules of imported goods a great variety of expensive fabrics, including expensive clothing, porcelain, and other articles of luxury, and adding their value to Schedule E, it will appear that the value of such articles is not less than $120,000,000 and the duties collected on them not less than $60,000,000, or nearly one-third of all duties collected. It certainly can not be said of these duties, in the language of the President, "that they impose a burden upon those who consume domestic products as well as those who consume imported articles, and thus create a tax upon all our people." On the contrary, these duties have imposed the chief burdens of taxation upon articles of voluntary luxury, and still have incited our own artists and mechanics to compete in these branches of industry with the most skilled artisans of Europe and Asia. In this way we have made the most remarkable progress in these expensive productions, and have brought within the means of great masses of our people porcelain, table ware, ornaments, clothing, decorated and enameled furniture, and a multitude of other articles of taste and luxury, the work of American mechanics. To reduce the duty on these foreign luxuries is but to transfer the burden of taxation from those who willingly bear it to the shoulders of the people.

The next class of duties to which I call your attention is on articles of food and animals. Of these the value imported during the last fiscal year was $112,273,076, paying a duty of $67,998,334, but of this sum the articles of sugar, fruit, and rice, valued at $90,898,000, paid a duty of $63,190,000, or more than nine-tenths of all the taxes levied on food and animals. These are articles which enter into the consumption of every family and every inhabitant of the United States. Now, if the object is to reduce surplus revenue, what better mode could be suggested than to repeal one-half of the duty on sugar, and thus directly relieve the people from $28,250,000 of taxes on an article in most general use by the people of the United States and bearing a tax of 82 per cent. No such suggestion is made by either the President or the Secretary, nor do I care to explore the reasons for their silence.

I believe in protecting all home industries, without respect to section, to the place or manner of production, whether on the farm or in the workshop; but if protection is not the object of the law, and surplus revenue is the great evil to be dealt with, why not give relief to our people by a reduction of the tax on sugar? The effort to produce sugar in this country in quantities at all approaching the demand has failed, though protected by rates among the highest imposed by our tariff laws. Still, in view of the hopeful prospects of producing sugar from beets and sorghum-cane, as well as from sugar-cane, I would not cripple this industry by reducing protective duties except by giving the producers of domestic sugar a bounty equal to the reduction of duty on the imported article.

But it is not the duties on food of which the President complains as "the vicious, inequitable, and illogical source of taxation." The duties of which he complains are those for "the benefit of our manufactures," and especially he urges "a radical reduction of the duties imposed upon raw materials used in manufactures, or its free importation." As I have already said, the great body of crude articles imported that enter into the processes of domestic industry, to the value of $106,389,032, are now free of duty. Every imported article of this class is now free of duty, unless it directly competes with the development of our national resources. The duties of which the President specially complains are such as are levied on "raw materials used in manufactures" that compete with textile materials raised on the farm and metallic ores dug from the mines. Duties averaging 32 per cent. are levied upon imported articles of this kind, valued at $59,542,660, which now yield a revenue of $19,567,903. The chief of these are agricultural productions, namely, wool, flax, hemp, and other textile grasses, hops, bristles, and seeds, valued at $35,000,000, and yielding a revenue of $10,000,000, or less than 30 per cent. duty. The remainder are chiefly metals in ore or pigs, coal, and marble, of the value of $22,490,108, yielding $9,270,526. These imports come into direct competition with the productions of near two million American farmers and hundreds of thousands of laboring men engaged in mines and furnaces in developing almost untold natural resources buried in the earth in nearly every State and Territory of the United States.

This moderate protection given to the labor and capital employed in mining and agricultural industries is the favorite point of assault by the President, and all free-traders, upon the protective policy. It is the citadel of the system. The whole depends upon the principle that it is wise to give by our tariff laws to all forms of American labor the protection or advantage which the imposition of duties on similar foreign production necessarily gives. This has been the rule since the beginning of our Government, recommended by every President of the United States from Washington to Polk. The same rule has been applied for the benefit of the farmer, the miner, and the furnace owner, as for the manufacturer. When it shall be established that labor on the farm, in the mine, and in the furnace shall not be protected as well as that in the workshop, the whole system will fall, and properly so.

The principle of protection demands equality of benefit and of burdens. The object is protection to labor, not to capital. The labor of the miner who digs the ore from the earth, and the furnaceman who molds his metal into pigs, and the farmer who raises wool, is entitled to the same degree of protection, to the extent of the labor employed by them in the production of pig-iron, iron ore, and wool, as the manufacturer who advances the iron into machinery, or the wool into cloth. The principle of protection applies to all American labor alike, and every hour of labor contributed in the whole process of the production of the highest work of art is entitled to equal consideration in framing protective duties. No reason can be given why wool should be made free, and woolen goods be protected. If we must have cheap wool, we must have cheap woolens, and if the labor of the farmer in producing the wool is not protected against undue competition with Australia or Buenos Ayres, then he who makes cloth of wool should not be protected against competition with the looms of Manchester or Leeds. If we have low duties on iron ore, we must have low duties on iron and steel in all its forms. The farmer in producing his crops performs as valuable labor as the artisan in the workshop, and the rights of every producer should have equal and just consideration without fear or favor.

And yet the President selects this class of productions under the name of "raw materials" for destruction, and specially selects wool as an article not to be protected, and recommends that "the removal or reduction of this duty should be included in the revision of our tariff laws." His whole argument rests upon the allegation that the price of wool is increased to the extent of the duty; that but for the duty the merchant could buy his wool cheaper in South America or Australia. This argument is shown to be fallacious, for the destruction of this industry in the United States would at once advance the price of wool in foreign markets. But suppose it to be true; does not this argument apply as well to all domestic productions and to all manufactures? Wool is the completed article of the farmer as the cloth is of the manufacturer and the coat is of the tailor.

The objection that the duty on wool will raise the price to the consumer, if true, applies as well to the duty on cloth and on every article on the tariff list. The all-sufficient answer is that the duty encourages the production of wool, the manufacture of cloth and of the infinite variety of articles produced or made by American labor competing with foreign labor. This diversity of production inures to the benefit of all classes of our people alike, and is the secret of the enormous growth, power, and wealth of the Republic.

When the President suggests the reduction of this duty as a means of reducing surplus revenue, he seems to be ignorant of the result produced by the tariff of 1883. When that act took effect, we had in the United States 50,360,243 sheep, yielding 262,000,000 pounds of wool. We have now 44,759,314 sheep, yielding 228,300,000 pounds of wool. Did this measure reduce the revenue from wool? Let us see. In 1883 we imported wool to the value of $8,915,149 and collected duty to the amount of $3,206,201. In the last fiscal year we imported wool to the value of $18,206,988, and collected as duty $6,390,055, thus more than doubling importations and nearly doubling the duties collected. Is this the way to reduce the surplus revenue? The President seems to think so; but the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] has found out the secret. According to a statement I have seen reported in the papers, he is satisfied that a reduction of duty would increase the revenue. He is so quoted in the papers. Whether the statement is true or not, I do not know, but he at least is a little wiser than the President.

But suppose we remove the duty on wool entirely, as the President recommends, we shall get rid of six millions revenue, but shall destroy one of the most important industries of the country. When, after opposing all I could the unwise reduction of the duty on wool in 1883, I, with great reluctance, voted for the tariff bill of that year, because its other provisions would reduce the surplus revenue. I was assailed by the Democratic Legislature of Ohio, and by every Democratic paper in that State, for voting for a bill that reduced the duty on wool; and now a Democratic President recommends its entire abolition! If a reduction of 20 per cent. of duty slaughtered 5,600,000 sheep, what will be the effect of the entire repeal of the duty?

But the President says millions of farmers who do not raise wool get no benefit from the duty on wool, and he indulges in faulty figures and computations as to whether the duty on wool is as much as the increased cost of clothing to the wool-grower. This is beneath the dignity of the policy involved. The question is whether the industry of wool-growing is of benefit to our country, and whether a duty on wool tends to develop that industry, or its repeal to destroy it.

By the same logic the man without children should oppose the school tax, the peace-loving Quaker should oppose all expenditures for the Army and Navy, the citizen of Kentucky for coast defenses, the people of New England for the improvement of the Mississippi River. The whole theory of the President is the outgrowth of the narrowest sectionalism, or rather, of the philosophy of selfishness, which sees no advantage in great objects of national desire, but only what is within the reach of his tub.

But it has been said that if the duty is repealed, the farmer will still go on and raise sheep for the food they yield. I deny it. The great body of sheep raised in the United States is for wool. This is especially so in Texas and California. The act of 1867 gave an enormous impetus to this industry. Former acts had almost destroyed it. The act of 1883 greatly injured it; and now the President, ignorant or heedless of this history, would slaughter millions of sheep upon the pretext of reducing revenue.

The same argument would apply to the duty on every one of the articles I have named—miscalled "raw materials." When I consider the enormous development of our mineral resources under our protective policy, the 10,000,000 tons of ore that choke the avenues of commerce, give employment to our vast system of railroads, build up cities like magic—when I recall the furnaces I have seen which light the heavens from Birmingham to Portland, the new and wonderful mines away off on the granite ridges of Lake Superior, the vast developments in the great Northwest from Minnesota to Washington Territory, the new industries in raw materials springing up in almost every State and Territory of the Union, the clay of the potter, the sand of the glass-maker, it seems to me almost an act of madness to disturb this growing prosperity. These raw materials are the foundation of all our industries.

All this is under the pretext that the surplus revenue must be diminished. Does not experience show that reducing the duties increases importation and adds to the revenue? And does not every man see that to repeal the duties outright is to place our farmers, our miners, our furnacemen, our railroads, and the multitude of people that live by these new developments, under such degrading competition as will cripple and destroy their industries? The pampas of South America may furnish you wool, the helots of Africa, Spain, and Cuba may give a few manufacturers iron ore and pig-iron a little cheaper; but the result will be to cripple the employment of greater masses of your countrymen, to impair their ability to purchase from you, and in the end to break down your whole industrial system.

It has always seemed to me that the most narrow and selfish notion advanced in respect to our tariff laws (to which the President now lends his name) is that made in behalf of advanced industries now supported by duties greater than those on raw materials; that they must be allowed to purchase their raw materials in the cheapest markets of the world; that we must leave undeveloped the mineral treasures planted by the Almighty in every State and Territory, in order that they may have cheap raw materials. Sir, I regard the home production of raw materials as even of more importance than manufactures. All of it is labor better distributed than any other, and gives larger employment to trade and transportation.

The enormous increase of such raw materials is shown by the contrast of the production of a few articles in 1860 and 1886. In 1860 the mines of iron ore yielded 908,300 tons. In 1886 the yield was 10,000,000 tons. The yield of pig-iron in 1860, largely from foreign ores, was 987,559 tons; in 1886, 5,683,329 tons. The yield of copper in 1860 was 7,200 tons; in 1886, 69,971 tons. There are still imported into the United States iron ores, pigs, scrap, and iron and steel in ingots, all called raw material, valued at $17,875,427, which pay duty of $7,801,699. If all of these raw materials were placed on the free-list you would reduce the revenue $7,800,000 and close the most useful industries on the continent. Iron ore and pig-iron free of duty would close every furnace where labor costs more than 50 cents a day, and, worse than all, it would make unprofitable the mining of 10,000,000 tons of iron ore and of as many tons of coal. The transportation of all this raw material would be lost to your railroads and internal waterways, and be given to the hulks, barges, and vessels of every nation but our own. If you reduce the rates, you increase importations, revenues, and surplus, and cripple home industries. If you repeal duties you destroy industries.

There is but one rule that must be applied to all industries impartially, and that is to give to all forms of American labor, which have to compete with foreign labor, that fair and reasonable advantage and protection which will give the American producer the home market for home products. If by reason of climate or other cause we can not compete with foreign countries, then let the trade be as free as air, unless a duty is demanded for purposes of revenue. We should invite competition by foreign labor, but not degradation to the European standard of wages of living.

Let us now turn from raw materials to manufactures. The imports not on the free-list, or classed by me as luxuries or raw materials, are articles partially manufactured for use as materials for manufacture, and manufactured articles ready for consumption, of the value of $218,052,246, which pay as duties $84,034,090. These importations come into direct competition with domestic manufactures mainly built up by the encouragement of our tariff laws. They include all articles made of metals further advanced than metal in pigs or ingots, all articles made of wool, flax, or cotton, all completed articles of every kind, except food, that enter into the consumption and use of civilized man. Scarce any of these industries existed in the United States when the Constitution was framed. Since then they have flourished or foundered according to the changing rates of our revenue laws.

It was these that Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, and Clay recommended should be fostered, encouraged, and protected. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] in a speech made here a few years since quoted these and many great statesmen in support of this policy; but it was not fully established until our civil war made higher rates and a more perfect classification necessary. Since then our tariff laws have been mainly framed and passed after the most careful consideration, founded upon the same principle, that while levying duties we should protect, foster, and diversify home industries with rates varying from time to time according to the needs of the Government and the growth and development of domestic manufactures. A careful revision of these was made by the Tariff Commission of 1882, which was not improved by the changes made in Congress. It was in the main enacted without party or sectional division and is now the law. All branches of domestic industry have become adapted to these rates except where, as in the case of worsted goods, forced and faulty constructions by revenue agents have defeated the meaning of the law. It is this system that is denounced by the President as "vicious, inequitable, and illogical."

If the objection made by him was only that it now produced too much revenue, I would then discuss with him the best mode of reducing revenue, whether by reducing internal taxes, or by adding to the free-list articles which can not be produced here, or by increasing rates on goods now in successful progress of manufacture or production, so as to discourage importation and invite home competition. If the only object is to diminish revenue. this is the plain, direct, logical, and effective mode, and I believe as to some industries it ought to be adopted. Even a fair enforcement of the law as it stands, with proper legislative provisions to prevent and punish undervaluations, with some tribunal willing to construe the laws so as to carry out their plain meaning, would reduce importations and revenue.

But that is not what the President wants. His denunciation is aimed at the principles of protection to American industries by tariff laws. He assumes, to use his own language, that "it is a scheme which permits a tax to be laid on every consumer in the land for the benefit of our manufacturers." He especially designates the farmers who are not wool-growers, the mechanics engaged in trades not protected, and the body of our people who are consumers as the victims of this policy. He says only "2,623,089 persons employed in manufacturing industries are claimed to be benefited by a high tariff." This statement of the President that only 2,623,089 persons "are claimed to be benefited by a high tariff" is a remarkable one, when the claim is universally made by those who believe in the policy of protection that all classes of citizens as well as those employed in domestic manufactures are deeply interested in this policy. But even if the statement is applied only to employés, it is misleading. Adding the number dependent upon their labor for a livelihood, and considering the enormous development of our domestic industries since that time, it is safe to say that one-fourth of our entire population is now directly interested in and supported by these industries. Add to these more than two million of farmers, with their families, engaged in producing wool, sugar, flax, hemp, rice, barley, and many other agricultural products protected by the tariff laws, and you will have some conception of the reach and extent of the legislation proposed by the President. Indeed, all the industrial classes of our population, all who are dependent in any way upon their labor and skill for a livelihood, all except those fortunate few whose fixed salaries or income make them independent of if not indifferent to the prosperity of their less fortunate neighbors, and those who are engaged in foreign commerce, are directly interested in the policy of protection.

But this is not all. Every inhabitant in favor of good government and the prosperity of this country is interested in the development, growth, and diversity of manufactures. This is an object of as vital importance as protection by army or navy, as education, peace, or property. It was the leading, controlling cause of the adoption of the Federal Constitution, and was the first object sought for by law when the Government was founded.

Sir, the farmers and mechanics of this country have long since learned to look beyond the narrow view of their interest taken by the President. They look at it from a higher plane. The farmer is protected by moderate tariff rates on everything produced by him which comes in competition with foreign labor. He, more than any other, receives the benefit of the home market furnished him by the diversified labor and employment of manufacturing industries, a home market that consumes 90 per cent. of all the surplus productions of the farm. The carpenter and the blacksmith know full well that every laborer employed in manufactures is withdrawn from competition with them and adds to their means of employment and to their wages. He needs no protection, for his work can not be performed by laborers in foreign lands. It is fixed by the home demand, and is therefore higher in price than in any other country in the world and higher than labor in factories.

The benefits of protection permeate through the whole community and extend to the remotest part of the country, but are most apparent in the immediate neighborhood of manufacturing industries. They are like the air around us, a part of the life we live, though we can not tell whence it comes. The general prosperity is measured by the increasing diversity and extent of our production, both of the farm and of the workshop. The lines between productions which formerly, by reason of the presence of slaves, were largely sectional are now broken down, and the most prospering and hopeful industries are to be found where slavery existed, and the labor of these once slaves, now free, is the means of the most rapid development of the mineral resources in our country.

The President assumes that the duty on imported articles is added to the price of similar articles of home production. He says:

> Millions of our people who never use and never saw any foreign products purchase and use things of the same kind made in this country and pay therefor nearly or quite the same enhanced price which the duty adds to the imported articles.

This can only be true when the article is not made in this country to any considerable degree. In the absence of domestic competition the importer fixes his own price and adds the duty and expenses to the cost in the place of manufacture. But at the first sign of American competition the importer reduces the price of his article and sells it often in a stagnant market at far less than the original cost and duty. Indeed, as a rule imported goods competing with American goods are sold in our market cheaper than in the European market, duties added. In this respect the English manufacturers adopt the old rule of our railroads as to the long haul and the short haul. They charge the home consumer short-haul rates as much as possible, and sell at long-haul rates in the American market, at the lowest living price, so as to drive out American competition. This accomplished, the price is advanced. This has been testified to by many merchants dealing in all kinds not only of American products but of foreign productions.

But, fortunately, in the great body of articles formerly imported the American manufacturer is well established, and under domestic competition the price of standard articles is reduced to approaching European rates, and in some articles we do now compete with them in the markets of the world. This process is now going on.

This is especially so with cottons and woolens and iron and steel manufactures and implements of trade and husbandry. The price of these is not affected by foreign productions, but only by home competition. Of the vast aggregate of manufactures in the United States, valued by the census of 1880 at $5,369,579,191, and now estimated at $7,000,000,000, it is believed about one-third are articles described in the tariff lists, and which come more or less in competition with imported goods. The market value of fully three-fourths of these is fixed by home competition at far less prices than the imported article can be sold for in our market.

Home competition, whenever it gets a foothold, reduces prices and lessens importations. The most remarkable example of this is in the production of glass and glassware, pottery and china-ware, which, under the present tariff, have become established industries, consuming a vast quantity of sand and clay found in great quantities and good quality in many States, and are now competing with European articles, and have greatly reduced the price.

Mr. Dudley, lately United States consul at Liverpool, says:

> An examination will show that there is not a single manufactured commodity, so far as I know, that is not cheaper to-day in the United States under our protective system than it was in 1860 under free trade and before the present protective tariff went into operation.

Again he says:

> Upon investigation it will be found that nine-tenths of the manufactured commodities used by the farmers of our country, including clothing, household goods, furniture, implements of husbandry, tools, etc., are as cheap in this country as they are in England, and in some instances even cheaper.

That statement is borne out by the actual returns from our consuls. Still the fact that large importations are now made of manufactures of iron, steel, cotton, wool, wood, leather, china, and glass ware is evidence that the duty on certain grades of these goods is not beyond the revenue standard. These are mainly those of highest cost, classed as luxuries, consumed only by the wealthy, while in the common grades of all branches of these manufactures the domestic article has driven the imported article from the market. This growth of home manufactures has been so marked and rapid that if the present system is maintained our home industries can and will compete with European production of all articles essential to human life and comfort.

The President states that under our present laws more than four thousand articles are subject to duty. This is a gross but common exaggeration. To show this I will attach to my remarks a list of all articles imported.

But I agree with him that if upon careful examination it shall appear that any duty on any articles can be dispensed with without detriment to American industry, it should be done. If any article now paying taxes can not be manufactured here, it should be placed on the free-list. But the fact that a multitude of articles on the tariff list yield little or no revenue is proof conclusive that the domestic product supplies the demand. In that case to place them upon the free-list might and perhaps would destroy an established home industry, induce importations, and increase the revenue. To even reduce the duty on minor articles so as to invite importations would increase the revenue and add to the surplus. A well-established home industry might in this way be overthrown by importations for that purpose, and then the price of the foreign article would advance and the revenue increase. Therefore stability of rates can do no harm, and may do much good.

But the President says that "as the volume and diversity of our national activities increase new recruits are added to those who desire a continuation of the advantages which they conceive the present system of tariff taxation directly affords them." A strange declaration, for the immediate effect of "new recruits" is to induce competition and lower prices. We see that in every branch of industry open to competition. But he says of these industries that "there exists a suspicion of an organized combination all along the line to maintain their advantage." This is impossible in nearly all the great branches of manufactures. The only striking examples of "organized combination" are by the distillers of whisky, the refiners of sugar, the cotton-seed-oil trust, and the Standard Oil Company, and as to these the President is silent.

He again makes reference to this subject in this language:

> But it is notorious that this competition is too often strangled by combinations quite prevalent at this time, and frequently called trusts, which have for their object the regulation of the supply and price of commodities made and sold by members of the combination.

When such combinations to prevent a reduction of price by fair competition exist, I agree that they may and ought to be met by a reduction of duty. I hope the President will be able to specify them. I know of none such. Combinations are often made by laborers to secure an advance of wages or by employers to reduce wages. If the President is able to aid us to find a remedy for these disputes about the division of the products of industry, I will give him credit as a public benefactor; but the remedy he proposes strikes alike at the laborer and employer. He invokes the poorly-paid labor of Europe to compete on equal terms with the American laborer and capitalist alike. The capitalist may survive it, but the laborer is necessarily brought to the wages and living and condition of the European laborer.

The object of our tariff laws is to encourage our manufacturers in their competition with their foreign rivals as well as to secure revenue. Therefore these laws should be as permanent as possible, consistent with the needs of the Government. Our citizens are encouraged to invest their money in expensive machinery and buildings to make articles that otherwise we must import. We give them no special privilege, no monopoly. All the world may in our own country enter into competition with them. The President, however, seems to think they are public enemies. He says if by fair competition they should reduce the price of the foreign articles, then, to use his language, "it is entirely evident that one thing has been discovered which should be carefully scrutinized in an effort to reduce taxation." I deny it. The condition of facts stated by him would invite competition at home, which would reduce the price more and more. This healthy process should be encouraged. To chase the successful manufacturer by a change of duties is to legislate for the foreigner against our own citizens.

And this brings me to the most important benefit conferred by our tariff laws; that the result is not only to diversify our industries but to secure to laborers employed in manufactories higher wages and better surroundings and advantages than are enjoyed by laboring men in similar employment anywhere in the world. The President does not overlook this, for he says:

> It is also said that the increase in the price of domestic manufactures resulting from the present tariff is necessary in order that higher wages may be paid to our workingmen employed in manufactories than are paid for what is called the pauper labor of Europe.

He says he acknowledges the force of this argument, that our labor is honorable, that it should not be measured by that of any country less favored. This is all very true, but is inconsistent with the rest of his message. He says of such workingmen, they are only one-seventh of our laboring population, that these, too, have their own wants and their families to supply, that the articles made here can be bought so much cheaper abroad, and we must consider that the tax falls upon all alike; but he says he will think of the workingman when he lowers the duty, and hopes the manufacturer will not reduce his pay. This is very much like the speech he makes to many an eager applicant for office whom he can not appoint. He consoles the workingman very much as he does the wool-grower, that, after all, he must buy his clothing, and he could buy cheaper if he would work at less wages and make his cloth out of Australian wool duty free. He closes his consolation to the workingman with this benediction:

> He receives at the desk of his employer his wages, and perhaps before he reaches his home is obliged, in a purchase for family use of an article which embraces his own labor, to return in the payment of the increase in price which the tariff permits, the hard-earned compensation of many days of toil.

The workingman is no doubt overwhelmed with this logic; but he might answer, "I am, it is true, only one to seven employed in other labor, but their wages do not compete with pauper labor. They are fixed at American rates, in competition with other Americans in the same trade, with American ideas and wants. I went into the factory here to compete with Europeans in establishing a new industry under a law which gave an advantage or protection to home industry. I thought it was right and patriotic. I have received fair wages, have learned the business and am content with it, and have saved a little, but not much. A benevolent and beneficent President thinks this is all wrong, that I must compete with the pauper labor of Europe and work as cheaply, that otherwise I am robbing all the rest of the laboring people of this country; so I must either go back to the farm or take such wages and living as have driven every year a half million of people from Europe to our shores."

The treatment of this question by the President, as it affects the workingman, is a delusion and a snare. He assumes that the cost of living, especially of food and clothing, is higher here than in Europe. This is not true. Food of every kind, except sugar, is cheaper here than in any market in Europe. This is shown by prices current and is proved by the vast export of provisions from the United States to every commercial port in Europe. Clothing worn by workingmen, including blankets, is sold here at prices as low as in London or Liverpool. It is only on the expensive grades of cloth and clothing that the cost in England and Belgium is less than in the United States. The quality and quantity of food of laboring men are confessedly better and greater here than in Europe. The rate of wages is from 50 to 100 per cent. higher here than in any country in Europe, and in some industries much higher. The President does not dispute this, but appeals to the manufacturer, who has been represented as a robber, a conspirator, and extortioner, not to reduce the wages of the workingman, but to pay him out of "surplus profits"—profits very often found on the wrong side of the ledger—profits yielding on the average less than legal interest on money.

What workingman does not feel that this is sheer mockery, and that the inevitable result is to reduce his wages by inviting a close competition with pauper labor? He must share the fate of his employer and divide with him the loss. The all-sufficient answer to the President is that the American laborer does not travel eastward across the ocean to better his condition, but the European laborer comes to America, where labor is respected, and the laborer is better fed, paid, and clothed than in any part of Europe or Asia. Whether this shall continue to be true depends upon the action of Congress in supporting or repealing this protective policy.

Sir, the question before us is one purely of wages. If wages in the United States were no greater than in England, France, and Belgium, our chief competitors, we could, no doubt, now compete with all the world in all metallic and textile fabrics. Is it wise in this country to pursue a policy that will compel the reduction of wages of laboring men employed in manufactures to the standard now general in European countries? We know from documents furnished by our consuls the rate of wages there.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], in a recent speech made in Boston, gives in detail the most striking information gained by him from personal observation and inquiry in the workshops of several countries of Europe as to the low, starving rates of wages, and the degradation of labor existing there. God forbid that such injustice and wrong shall ever exist here. Our free institutions could not survive such scenes. Manufactories conducted upon such a basis would be an unmitigated curse. Cheapness purchased at such a price would be a crime. And yet without protective duties we must either abandon our manufactures or reduce wages to the European standard. What more evidence do we need than the hundreds of thousands of people who come to us annually from European countries, bearing the most indisputable testimony to their poverty, their sufferings, and their distress?

The Republican party, inheriting, as they think, the principles of their ancestors, have declared that it is the duty of the National Government, not only to levy enough duties on imported merchandise to support the Government, but that, in doing so, they should so levy these duties as to secure to laboring men employed in manufactures, so far as they can, such wages as will not only furnish them a comfortable living, but will properly support, maintain, and educate wife and children. Cheap labor in this country means the degradation of American politics. The great body of our voting population must labor on the farm, in the mine, or in the workshop, and if without the means of livelihood and opportunities of education, they are not prepared to perform the highest duties of citizens.

Sir, I believe that the advice of the President, to largely reduce the duties on goods coming into competition with our manufactures, will, if sanctioned by Congress, have the effect to produce widespread disaster in every part of our country. Many prosperous industries will be destroyed; others will be crippled. Laboring men will be thrown out of employment, or their wages reduced. It will be no compensation for this distress that a few imported articles will for a time be cheaper in our market, for if there is less to pay there will be fewer to buy. The farmer will have no better market abroad for his products, but will have fewer customers and more competitors at home. Distress can not fall upon a large portion of our people without its widening circles extending to the whole mass. Our national experience, and my own observation during my public life, prove that when protective duties have been reduced the results produced disappoint the authors of that policy, ending in financial distress, and often in panics. This is no time for such an experiment. The signs of unrest in Europe, the vast armaments, the misery of the laboring poor, all warn us to stand by our American policy of home development, of protected industry, and internal improvements. I wish in advance to take my stand against any substantial disturbance of this beneficent policy.
